MOTOR NOTES AND NEWS.

Night Driving and the Importance of Decisive Signals : Tyre Service : How to Secure Greater Mileage.

Nowadays when practically every owner-driver uses his car at night, either to pay a call or to visit a theatre, the adoption of just a few generally accepted and well recognised signals—used decisively and only when occasion demands—will save a great deal of trouble, expense and possible injury, not only to himself but to other road users.

SIGNALS.

Indiscriminate use of indefinite and doubtful signals will only bring bumps and collisions in their wake; therefore, it is well worth while to learn those signals which are well recognised and use them sparingly. One should not act on his own signal unless he is sure that the drivers of approaching cars understand it. I have frequently seen drivers suddenly stick out an arm, and in many cases little more than the hand, pull across the road, paying no further regard to following traffic. Such a type of driver generally gets what such conduct merits, but, unfortunately, the other fellow who is following also pays the penalty for inconsiderate and poor driving of the leading car. The least that is expected of a driver who intends to pull across the main line of traffic is that he should give a distinct warning by signal before he reaches the point at which he intends turning, and to keep the signal out until he has completed the operation.

"DRIVING ON THEIR HORNS."

There are some drivers who have formed the habit of "driving on their horns." They hoot needlessly, and no matter the condition of the traffic before them they apparently believe that hooting the horn is all that is expected of them in getting through thick traffic streams. It is a poor excuse to say after an accident has happened, "I sounded my horn." Discretion in horn-blowing is most desirable, and doing so at the wrong moment often results in accidents to nervous pedestrians.

CONTROLLING HEAD LIGHTS.

The good driver will, where it is consistent with safety, always dim his headlights. It is not, however, always wise to do so, as it might run him into danger. When meeting powerful headlights it is a great help to avoid looking at them to keep one's eyes fixed on the near side of the roadway and slow down, in addition to which it is sometimes possible to slightly set one's headlights to the left of the approaching car, which also helps the driver of that car, as he is thus enabled to avoid the direct glare of the lights.

No driver can afford when his car is in motion, and when conversing with the occupant of the seat at his side, to look at him. Always keep a good look out, and cultivate the habit of conversation without turning round to observe its effect on your fellow-passenger. Listening as one approaches cross roads often avoids a nasty bump or worse, and when this habit is cultivated it is surprising what difficulties the driver can avoid by listening and observing signs. Road sense comes by experience, and its cultivation by observation of signs. The smell of burnt petrol and listening will prove a very real advantage to the driver.

CAUSES OF POOR TYRE SERVICE.

Incorrect air pressure, wheel irregularities and misalignment, cuts in tyres, rapid acceleration, and hard and sudden braking are the main factors all within the control of the driver, which robs him of economical mileage from his tyres.

First-class tyres of any make have practically the same potential mileage in them, yet how few motorists obtain the same mileage from similar makes of cars fitted with the same type of tyres. This is due to the manner in which the cars have been driven, and very little time and trouble are necessary to get the utmost value out of the tyres.

Correct pressures for the load is the first and most important essential, as insufficient air will cause excessive deflection or bending of the cover. This results in serious strains on the cord casing, which in time gives way, and continuous bulging and scraping of the thread over the road surface increases the thread wear and reduces the mileage. The pressures should be tested weekly with a gauge, guess-work being a very poor substitute therefor.

Deflection—that is, insufficient air pressure—is responsible for concussion bursts. When a tyre is under-deflated and the car, travelling at speed, strikes a brick or a deep pot-hole, the force behind the impact is so great, and being concentrated on a very small area, that a burst occurs.

Common causes of wasted mileage are wheel irregularities and misalignment. A wheel loose in its bearings, untrue, or out of balance, will wear its tyre unevenly, and if the type is under-inflated uneven wear will result, especially on the front wheels. The appearance of a tyre worn unevenly is an indication that wheel adjustment is necessary.

Wheels running out of parallel causes very rapid tyre wear, and the alignment of front wheels need checking at least twice a year. Otherwise they may start to run out of parallel. A tyre running on a misaligned wheel presents the appearance of having been filed down. Cuts other than superficial ones should, as soon as observed, be cleaned out with a rough file and filled with some good make of tyre-filling composition. This will keep out dirt and moisture which otherwise would work in and destroy the cord casing. Cuts which have penetrated the casing of a tyre should receive the attention of a tyre repairer. Loose patches or gaiters should only be used in an emergency, for if left in position for any length of time the bending of the casing under load will set up friction between the gaiter and the casing, which in time will chafe through the cord material.

Speed, acceleration and braking, as well as road surface, must also be considered. Careful driving gives greatly increased tyre life. On a test, the rate of tread wear at 45 miles per hour is more than double that at 35 miles per hour. Rapid acceleration causes wheel slippage, which subjects the tread to fierce abrasion, while hard braking heavily strains both tread and casing.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

FOUR BOOKS OF RECENT POETRY.

THE modern England of Blake's Satanic mills is happily forgotten when we come on Mr. Edmund Blunden's new book, with its revelation of a rustic England, compact in hamlets, peopled with ploughmen, herders and sundry husbandmen—all thriving smugly in rich decay, where—

> The bonfires crackling zeal dies down,
> The laughing supper groups are gone,
> The fair falls quiet in Yalding town,
> Alone with the mist I linger on.

Even in the Japanese section of Mr. Blunden's book—one in which he "does not produce a mystical incomprehensibility"—his Japan is depicted in the luxuriant rusticity of homely shires, where the Japanese labourer is an Oriental Giles. As in most of Mr. Blunden's poetry—largely objective—his heavily gnarled language is rarely lightened by emotional intensity; and as in this book it is frequently darkened with a pack of thought—there the imagery thickens, clogged to a fine excess that occasionally startles. Indeed, it is healthy nowadays to come upon a young poet of Mr. Blunden's quality—one in whom the wholesome tradition of English poetry is still maintained in its beauty of image and outline—

> That storm of beltried cities in my mind
> Leaves me my vespers cool and eglantined.
> From love's wide-flowering mountain-side I chose
> This sprig of green, in which an angel shows.

Such is Mr. Blunden's summary in "Values," and it is an estimate with which few, we think, can dispute.

* * * * *

Unlike the young English poet, Mr. Hamish MacLaren and his "Sailor with Banjo" ravish the world's ports and, indeed, many strange lands and fancies in the pursuit of romantic devilry. Now we are presented with a delightful first book by Mr. MacLaren. This book is an entertainment in rhyme and song, in which hearty ballads and whimsical lyrics reveal a pleasant ear and bright eye quick to seize the picturesque image, a bracing music rollicking and full of heartease. These songs are bright with sensuous delight, toned, at times, to a sad cadence recalling the far-away sea chantey:

> She was my own good girl, she took my money,
> Away boys, lift and walk away!

Sailor-like, when not on sea, Mr. MacLaren's songs are in the tavern; or, again, as many a sailor, they take to peddling strange delights in a delicacy and with a subtlety that sems, at times, almost unseaworthy. This pedlar, hawking his "secret store" of shadows and dews can say—

> I bring you smoke of apple logs,
> Song of red leaves that whirl and patter,
> The gold that lies in nester mugs,
> The silver charm of swallow-chatter.

In such pleasant fancies we have a touch of those old Gaelic poets whose intimacy with nature amplified the melody of "bees and chafers—little musicians of the world"; surely these little singers keep company with Mr. MacLaren's "lady-bird in crimson blouse." Again his Gaelic acquaintance is maintained in that sailor's ballad, beginning—

> If all the young maidens were blackbirds and thrushes,
> Sing merry, sing merry, now fly not away!
> I'd find me a garden of green flowering bushes
> Where all the young maidens might nest them in May.

Mr. MacLaren does not suffer from very severe heart-breaks; like Mr. Michael Walsh's finely-carved poems in "Brown Earth and Green," he is conscious of such strains and in contemplation of them his thought quickens. There are plenty of signs to show that with a deepening of his imagination a more subtle music is bound to intensify the poetry of Mr. Hamsh MacLaren. We expect the golden journey from him; already he whets our anticipation—

> And when the hawthorn spills its lead
> Of stars too bright to let me rest,
> I'll cut a stick and take the road
> And walk into the crimson west.

"Transitional Poem," by C. Day Lewis, is by far the most notable volume that has reached us from the Hogarth Living Poets. Mr. C. Day Lewis shows with his new work a very marked development in style and greater independence of thought. Such an opinion one cannot express on V. Sackville West's volume in the same series; for, indeed, her "King's Daughter" is so pretty, thin and in every way too polite to afford us any of the immense joy we received from "The Land" which that writer gave us some years ago. The central theme of "Transitional Poem" is the single mind. The poem is divided into four parts, which, as the author says, "essentially represent four phases of personal experience in the pursuit of single-mindedness: a transition is intended from one part to the next such as implies a certain spiritual progress and a consequent shifting of aspect . . . . the parts fall with fair accuracy into the divisions of a theorem in geometry—i.e., general enunciation, particular enunciation, proof, corollaries."

Apart from such compositions, we read the many poems that build up the central theme with a real delight in their own intrinsic poetry—accepting the poet's strong individuality and strength of mind as worthy of greater note; and at the same time recognising faint echoes of other cadences, the latter Yeats in particular. Yet Mr. C. Day Lewis is no respecter of persons or periods. His range of vigorous imagery is very wide, as startling as Donne and as modern. This poet is surely "no English lawn to build a smooth tradition out of Time's recession. . . . .

> content
> If he can transplant
> One slip of Paradise
> Into his own eyes."

* * * * *

Every poem in this book possesses with freshness and force some beauty of idiom, fashioned on riotous thought At times the poet seems to delight in breaking up apparent unities; emotion is smashed with intellectual pistons—may be from an insolence that seems cynical. He may fear transactions of the heart, and, therefore, with intellectual misgivings he vigorously sets out to tramp down all thorny fires of emotion—

> For love still keeps apart,
> And all its vanities
> But emphasise higher heaven,
> As February trees
> Where rooks begin their noisy
> Coronation of the wood
> Are furreted with folly
> Yet grow toward some good

Yet there are tenderneases breaking through his severity—a tenderness seen mostly through the nature etching of many poems, where such sentiment may be understood in one whose way is "the heron's flight which makes a solitude of any sky." What, then, gives birth to his fear? Surely it cannot arise from the chronometrical misbehaviours of one who drives him to admit—

> With me, my lover makes
> The clock assert its chime;
> But when she goes, she takes
> The mainspring out of time.

Mr. C. Day Lewis is too well read not to know of a law competent to avenge such thefts. However, we are glad that his fears promote the uncertainties and despairs that mean so much to poetry; and as this book is full of uncertainties, so is it full of a poetry, which leaves us with no uncertainty as to the future of Mr. C. Day Lewis's work, if continued on its present scale of growth.

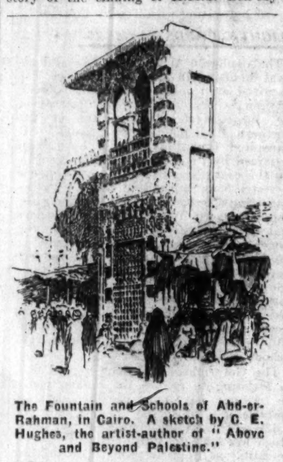
THE DUBLIN MAGAZINE.—The January-March issue of this review contains a well-considered paper by "An Architect" on the Greater Dublin proposals. The first of a series of bibliographies of Irish authors concerned with the writings of Mr. George Russell. There is a short story by Brinsley MacNamara.

AERIAL SERVICE IN THE HOLY LAND.

THERE are few countries that have spurred the imagination of writers so well or so often as Palestine. In the modern spate of publications there is scarcely a month that in passing does not bring at least one volume to the already comprehensive and lengthy list of good books that are concerned with the land beyond the Eastern end of the Mediterranean.

Some weeks ago there appeared under the title of "Crusaders' Coast," a volume in which the author presented the impressions which Palestine had made upon him while serving as an officer with Allenby. The writer, Mr. Edward Thompson, himself a keen and appreciative observer and pilgrim, had the assistance of a brother officer, Mr. C. E. Hughes, whose illustrations, taken from a war-time sketch book, added no little charm to the volume.

To-day there is published another book about Palestine; this time the story—along with more than sixty sketches which adorn its pages—comes from the pen of Mr. Hughes himself. Nominally the story of a Naval Wing of the Royal Air Force in the Eastern Mediterranean, it is actually the personal narrative of an intelligence officer, and was written during the author's service with a seaplane squadron which had its base at Port Said. As such, the book is a record of details of many operations which rarely figured in the published official reports—bombing raids, attacks on Turkish positions, submarine hunts, and the full story of the sinking of H.M.S. Ben-My-Chree. The story takes the reader not only to and across Palestine, but to Kerak, the Hijaz and Lower Egypt.



The Fountain and Schools of Abd-er-Rahman, in Cairo. A sketch by C. E. Hughes, the artist-author of "Above and Beyond Palestine."

Mr. Hughes, however, is no mere chronicler of war-time operations. The best and biggest part of the book is devoted to wholly delightful and humorously-serious descriptions of minor adventures which befell himself and his colleagues. Moreover, his people and personalities live—amongst them, Jim Irish, the Arab contractor, of Port Said, whose signboard bears the legend: "Well known to the British Army and Navy. Established 1882"; and Private Bedford, the batman, whose imperturbable cheeriness found frequent expression in a low windy whistle which occasionally, but not often, suggested some popular air. This is a book full no less of strength and charm of writing than of strength and grace of line in drawing.

HAPPINESS BY THE WAYSIDE.

READERS of the more serious pages of The Tatler are familiar with Mr. King's thoughtful reviews of current literature, and with the essays that preface those reviews. The title of any one of the volumes in which these essays have been gathered together, gives a true picture of the matter contained in it: "With Silent Friends," "Folded Hands," "Over the Fireside," and others, and now comes "At the Close of Day."

Mr. King loves the simple, homely things of life: birds, flowers, a dog by the fireside, books, and some solitude in which to think his own quiet thoughts. Age has no terrors for him; for in his gentle philosophy it is only through the inevitable sorrows and disappointments of life that we come to a full realisation of its beauty. "The Spring is never really the Spring to the very young," he writes.

The longest essay in the book is devoted to the subject of life's Minor Blessings, and the title of another seems to put the writer's views in a nutshell; "Happiness Grows by the Wayside," it is called.

DEBRETT FOR THE NEW YEAR.

THE 1930 edition of "Debrett's Peerage, Baronetage, Knightage and Companionage" (Dean, 75s. net) is edited by Mr. Arthur G. M. Hesilrige. Among the subjects mentioned are the King's recent illness and recovery, the appointment of Counsellors of State, the hurried return of the Prince of Wales and Duke of Gloucester from Africa, the recent general election and change of Government, the empowering of the Prince of Wales to confer the accolade and invest with insignia of various orders, the re-appointment of Counsellors of State with more limited powers, the establishment of a Committee for Privileges of House of Lords and Claims to Ancient Baronies, and of a badge for baronets: other badges, insignia, etc., granted during the past thirty years.

The Garter Mission to Japan is described, and the further effect of the Great War upon succession to hereditary titles is discussed. The number of pages in "Debrett" has doubled in the last thirty years.

RECENT FICTION.

A GOOD DETECTIVE STORY.

THIS is an excellent detective story, which retains the interest throughout without recourse to the crude artifices with which the majority of detective-story writers seek to attain that end. It is remarkable also for the unusual brevity of its chapters—one or two are not over a page in length—and for the effective vignettes of a number of minor characters. The body of a man, discovered lying in a London cul de sac, with a fine Quatrocento dagger in his back, is at first thought to be that of an American millionaire, and there is a panic in Wall street; but later the murdered man is found to be merely an absconding clerk, and the brokers breathe again. In addition to absconding with a share of the millionaire's wealth, however, he has taken documents which seriously compromised certain persons acting in the interests of the Soviet Government—and of themselves.

The mystery of the man's death is elucidated by Detective Inspector Frost in a manner that refreshes the jaded reader of mystery stories by its practical commonsense, and the inspector's own account of his work is spiced with quiet humour. Dr. Maynard Smith's English, as becomes the editor of the Church Quarterly, also is a pleasant change from what passes as English in most stories of this type; but more careful proof-reading would have prevented a mixture of persons and tenses in some of the chapters.

"Inspector Frost in the City." By H. Maynard Smith. E. Benn. 7/6 net.

THE Brocklebanks of Bentley are of sturdy yeoman stock, famous throughout Bedfordshire for pig farming. Bob and Nellie, father and mother, are simple, elemental, homely folk, admirably drawn to character. Their eldest son, Sandy, develops an ambition to become something more than just a good farmer, but drops his ambition in order to run the farm after his father's death, gives up his sweetheart because she would be dissatisfied with life on Bentley, and stifles his eagerness to join Kitchener's Army because he is "the necessary man" at home.

With this material many contemporary novelists would have written a highly coloured and sordid tragedy. Miss Logan avoids that temptation, and tells her story with an economy of emotion that proves very effective. Even in minor things—Sandy's letters home from boarding-school for example—she succeeds in giving a peculiarly vivid impression of truthfulness. Character and situation are presented with skill rare in a beginner's work, and altogether, and despite a tendency to pathos—never, however, over-obtrusive—Miss Logan has written a first novel of unusual quality and power.

"The Necessary Man." By Agnes Logan. London: Nisbet. 7/6 net.

DAN CONDOR, the principal male character of Duncan Logan's book, "No Retreat," seems to have relied altogether on his physical beauty and attraction to bring him everything he desired in life. He is described as "unconsciously ruthless in quest of his needs." Ruthless he was certainly, and totally indifferent to the effects of his ruthlessness, even on those whom he cared about in his selfish way. He comes like a cyclone into the quiet lives of a little circle of people, and in one way or another makes trouble for all of them, most of all for the girl he takes from another man and transplants from her civilised surroundings to his ramshackle farm. Convinced, as the reader must be, of the worthlessness in most respects of Dan, it is impossible to throw down the book and have done with him; one must follow his erratic path to its stormy end, raging meanwhile at his deep conviction that nothing matters really but himself and the gratification of his mood of the moment. The story is full of the exciting incidents and the tension that inevitably accompany such a character.

"No Retreat." By Duncan Logan. Henry Walker. 7/6 net.

MR. J. Hamilton Eaves was the recipient of a pack of cards, minus one of the kings. That, in itself, might seem to be nothing of great importance, but he happened to be a company promoter of the shadiest kind, and when he learned that others of his trade had received similar packs, together with a warning—which he too received—to cease operations within a short period, he realised that something might happen. He discovered that those of his brother financiers who had disregarded the warning met with an untimely "accidental" death. He induced, by his own shady means, one of his staff to impersonate him; but that did not save him; for he was found stabbed. That is really only the beginning of Mr. Keeler's story, which is certainly filled with excitement.

CATTLE.

DUBLIN (Metropolitan).—After holiday interruption our live stock market this week presented more normal conditions both as regards supplies and regular channels of trade. Still, the volume of offtake in either home or shipping interests has not yet come near up to the level of three or four weeks ago. The gathering of cattle to be dealt with was mainly of plain or unfinished character. Trade, on the whole, proved cautious, but the money position was little varied from previous range. Choice cattle were scarce, and, perhaps, occasionally got placed at some slight appreciation, while all useful grades well maintained former worth. There was not such a keen inquiry for big bullocks as recently unless where of extra class and finish. Lancashire buyers were helpful in reducing the heavy pressure of light and half meated beasts, particularly in the outfed section of exhibits, which found a good deal of favour with certain Manchester men. Rather a significant reflection attaches to the value position of best as indicated by London quotations this week, which show prices 1d. to 1d. per lb. generally lower for home killed, chilled and frozen classes. It is not thought, however, that this will have any actual direct influence on value of Irish cattle; in fact, the opposite is looked for in near future. The sheep market, with less pressure in supply and butchers resuming purchases, presented a healthier tone, but business and prices all the same moved erratically, outside the primer selections of butchers' handy weight wethers and hoggets lambs of shipping class. Ewes continue to sell relatively well.

Although basest trade ruled quiet and cautious in the main, it was, nevertheless, kept fairly steadily going throughout. Only choice big, well-meated bullocks were particularly attractive to shipping men; medium weights and plainer grades not so keenly bid for. Nice quality home trade heifers and oxen were placed more freely at previous tip-top rates. For prima stall-fed cattle terms averaged 46s. to 48s., with 49s. to 50s. perhaps not so rare or exceptional for fancy blacks, and, in fact, the latter figure was occasionally beaten; medium stall-feds, say 44s. to 45s. per cwt.; best drafts of out-fed beasts 38s. to 42s. 6d., rough and leaner sorts 36s. to 37s. 6d. per cwt. Beef cows proved a decidedly better and freer market, in which all grades participated. Choice young fat cows 36s. 6d. to 38s. per cwt., fair 30s. to 35s., and others proportionately; good clearance.

Sheep market, although in the main decidedly improved and firmer business movements indicated certain erratic cycles, which made experiences variable on many stands. However, choice butchers' sheep were mostly placed more advantageously than recently, including medium heavy weathers. Cheviot wathers of 3 or 4 teath class neglected. Ewes continued to sell relatively well. The market was again fairly active of suitable hogget lambs for export, but it was difficult in many instances to make prices fit, as those mostly wanted were inside 44s. to 56s. each. Prime mutton 10½d. to 11¼d., perhaps 1s. per lb.; other sorts 9d. to 10d. per lb.; ewes 66s. to 76s. per head.

DUBLIN DAIRY.—The offering of dairy cattle totalled 301 head. There was a fair attendance of buyers, but a rather quiet tone overhanging market. Previous values were generally hard to equal, but for cows suitable to heavy shipping trade in both Scotch and Cheshire directions terms were fully maintained. Choice middle-aged heavy milchers £37 to £51 and £53; few up to latter merit in evidence. Prime young cows and heifers £34 to £37 and £38, fair £18 to £33, poor and ordinary sorts £12 to £16 or £17.

DUBLIN PIG.—Market embraced a supply of just 740 head of swine, for which a very active and clear trade existed, both home buyers and shippers being keen patrons and in strong opposition for hogs suiting their respective requirements. For average top selections of pork and bacon hogs prices were about 100/- to 120/- per cwt. dead reckoning, while it is almost impossible to say what fancy porkette pigs around 4 to 5 or 6 score weight would work out at per cwt.; perhaps 135/- to 150/- per cwt. Coarse and overheavy hogs 87/6 to 90/-. The live weight test of best quality hogs before being passed in market as against subsequent sales, gave values as approximately 82/- to 84/- per cwt. on foot. Sow pigs also sold remarkably well and clear up to £16 to £18 and £19 per head for heavy classes.

YORK.—Light show Irish store cattle and only one pen English. Fair attendance buyers, and late rates were maintained at up to £23 for best animals. Light offer calving and milch cows, and trade for better class animals was brisk, and here again late rates were maintained. Small show sheep, with trade still of holiday character.

BRISTOL.—The market was of a holiday nature, and quotations are nominal. There is little variation in fat stock, mutton and lambs.

GLASGOW.—A holiday market was held yesterday when very short supplies of cattle and sheep were offered. Prices generally were slightly down. Best bullocks and heifers 68/6, current 62/- to 65/-, secondary 50/- upwards, live cwt. Down hoggets 75/-, cross 65/-; half-breds 70/-, half-bred ewes 65/-, Cheviots 56/-.

BIRMINGHAM PIG.—Short supply again, and trade active, with rates firmer. Quotations:—Sizable bacons 13/- to 13/6, cutters 20/- to 21/-, and sows 16/- per score, dead weight.

LIVERPOOL.—WHEAT—American and Argentine markets showed an improvement over the holidays here, and shipments from latter were small, which caused forward deliveries of wheat here to advance to a liberal extent at the outset; receded slightly, though again moved upwards on increased Argentine tex, closing, however, decidedly under best, owing to disappointing sales afternoon and limited parcels—No. 2 hard winter afloat sold at 47/10½, Dec.-Jan. 47/6, Rosario-Santa Fe 63¼lb. arrived 46/6, and Jan. 46/3 per cr. STORE CATTLE SALES.

MESSRS. GANLY, SONS AND CO.

For the opening sale of the New Year, as is usual, there was only a small show of cattle on offer. With a large attendance of buyers, a good selling trade resulted, at much improved prices to those ruling before Christmas. A complete clearance was effected, and many more could have been disposed of. Horned bullocks and heifers made from 40/- to 43/- per cwt.; Aberdeen-Angus crosses from 42/- to 45/- per cwt. One pen of very choice Aberdeen-Angus belly bullocks, from the County Limerick, made 47/- per cwt., the top live-weight quotation of the sale.

MESSRS. R. AND J. WILKINSON.

There was a rather short entry of store cattle, which, however, met a good trade at firmer prices than those ruling before Christmas, and there appeared to be a considerable inquiry for suitable cattle of all classes, especially those in forward condition. Good, aged bullocks realised from 39/- to 40/- per cwt., and heifers from 38/- to 42/6 per cwt. Young cattle continue in only moderate request, excepting those of really nice quality.

MESSRS. GAVIN LOW, LTD.

Following the holiday period, the sale yesterday was of small dimensions. There was a good number of buyers present, particularly home feeders, on the outlook for cattle of good quality. A decided change for the better was experienced throughout the sale, and all nice quality lots were easily disposed of at a substantial advance on rates current a fortnight ago. The top price of the sale, 47/- per cwt., was obtained for a pen of well-bred Hereford heifers. Aberdeen-Angus and Hereford crosses made from 47/- to 39/-, and horned bullocks and heifers from 42/- to 35/-.

WOMAN'S SUDDEN DEATH.

Dr. Brannan, Coroner for South Dublin, having heard the evidence of Dr. O'Connor at an inquest on Mrs. Lucy Davies, Mulgrave street, Kingstown, who was found dead in bed, returned a verdict of death from cardiac syncope. Mrs. Davies was 68 years of age.

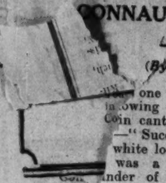
THE STORY OF A TOAST.

BUENOS AYRES, 1807.

THE ONSLAUGHT OF THE CONNAUGHT RANGERS.

(By "F. W. G.")



[illegible] one hundred years ago the [illegible]owing toast was extremely [illegible]Coin canteens and taverns all over [illegible]—"Success to grey hairs, but bad white locks!" [illegible] was a thrust at the luckless [illegible]nder of the unfortunate expeditionary force which was sent to capture Buenos Ayres in the year 1807—an expedition with which Ireland was intimately connected by two regiments which took part in it. They were the Royal County Down Regiment, now called the Royal Irish Fusiliers, and the famous 88th Foot, better known as the Connaught Rangers. The latter regiment suffered cruel losses in the gallant part which it played in the assault. It is a sad, yet glorious, page in British military annals.

In June, 1806, Brigadier-General Beresford—a member of a distinguished Irish family — acting in conjunction with Commodore Sir Home Popham, captured Buenos Ayres with a tiny force. He THOMAS J. Bo[illegible]no reinforcements from England, W. GREEN[illegible] obliged to surrender unconditi- 18 HAWKINS ST[illegible] Mas the Spaniards, who were in strength, after a short time. In the meantime help was being [illegible]1928 Ford [illegible] 16, Rutland [illegible]rom the home country, and an [illegible] Chili also had been decided upon; but the news of Beresford's defeat reached the transports on their way, and orders were given for a further attack on Buenos Ayres.

Additional troops were concentrated hastily at the Rio de la Plata for the task, and the total force numbered little short of eleven thousand men, including the regiments mentioned above, with artillery and several squadrons of dragoons. The artillery and dragoons, however, were so lamentably short of horses that most of the dragoons were obliged to fight as infantry men in the short campaign which followed.

A GENERAL'S MISTAKES.

Lieutenant-General Whitelock, who was selected to command the assembled army, had arrived from England at Monte Video on the 10th May, but it was not until the 17th June that the transports got under way. On the 25th June the army began its disembarkation at Ensenada, about thirty miles distant from Buenos Ayres, but the operation was not completed until three days later.

The march to Buenos Ayres was begun next day through swamps and streams, and some of the guns were left behind owing to the difficulties of transportation. General Craufurd led the way with the 95th (now the Rifle Brigade) and a battalion formed of nine light companies of the various regiments taking part in the enterprise. He forded the Chuelo on the 2nd July in the face of the enemy, whom he completely routed.

Craufurd captured twelve guns and pursued the flying foe to the outskirts of the town, where Captain Carroll, with his company of Connaught Rangers, captured another gun. There Craufurd reformed his troops, who were in some confusion after their victory, and asked permission of General Gower, the second in command, to press home the attack on Buenos Ayres. As General Whitelock was still far behind, with the main portion of the army, Gower unfortunately refused his consent, although another brigade was available; and the victorious troops were obliged to bivouac that night in drenching rain.

On the following morning General Gower summoned the town to surrender, but a defiant answer was received. The British picquets were attacked and the Rangers lost a number of men in repelling the assault. General Whitelock did not arrive until the afternoon with the remainder of the army; and, for some unexplained reason, he did not order an assault until the 5th, thus giving the Spaniards, who were commanded by General Liniers, ample time to prepare their town for defence.

VAIN GALLANTRY.

The British general divided his force into eight different columns, and, so scarce were proper tools for the forcing of such obstacles as would be encountered, that only two men were thus equipped in every column. At half-past six o'clock the troops advanced into the town, where a deathly stillness reigned. Not a person was at first to be seen anywhere. Then suddenly the flat roofs of the houses were seen to be crammed with armed men—both townspeople and soldiers—and volley after volley was poured with deadly effect into the steadily advancing columns. Men, women and children, from the security of window and roof, hurled missiles of all descriptions on the troops below, and guns judiciously placed swept the streets with devastating discharges of grape-shot.

One wing of the Connaught Rangers, under Colonel Duff, pushed desperately on to a church, which they unavailingly tried to force with the scanty tools at their disposal; but the strength of the iron-barred doors defeated their efforts. Nevertheless, they managed to storm two houses which they held for four hours under a murderous fire. Not until they had fired their last cartridge did they obey the repeated summons to lay down their arms.

The left wing of the regiment, under Major Vandeleur, fared no better. The detachment penetrated deeply into the town, but, hemmed in on all sides by Spanish troops and infuriated townsfolk assisted by artillery, it, too, was forced to surrender after a most determined resistance.

VANQUISHED LEADER.

The worst calamity which befell the assaulting army was the loss of Craufurd and the Light Brigade. They had forced the St. Domingo Church, where they established themselves firmly, believing that everything was going well. A Spanish officer, with a flag of truce, informed them of the capture of the 88th and summoned Craufurd to surrender, but the British officer refused to parley. A stout resistance was maintained for some hours, and the enemy continually brought up fresh forces. Then Craufurd, seeing that the position was getting desperate, attempted a sortie, but his men were driven back to the church. Artillery was now brought to bear on the building, from which there was no escape, and the remnant of the Light Brigade was at length compelled to surrender. Elsewhere the position was somewhat more reassuring, as portions of the town, including the great Square and the Residentia were firmly held by the attackers; but these gains had cost 2,500 officers and men.

SUGGESTED SCHEME OF RECLAMATION.

FROM MERRION GATES TO KINGSTOWN.

IRISH TRADE WITH UNITED STATES.

It was suggested at the annual general meeting of the Manufacturers' Agents Association, in Wynn's Hotel, Dublin, yesterday, that, instead of spending £240,000 a year in the relief of unemployment, as was done last year, the money should be expended on the building of a great breakwater from the West Pier at Kingstown to the South Wall at the Pigeon House.

Mr. T. F. Burke, who made the suggestion, stated that under a scheme of this kind many acres of land would be reclaimed on which one of the finest civil aerodromes in the world could be built, while piers along the line of the breakwater would relieve congestion in the Liffey.

Mr. Jeremiah O'Sullivan presided.

CONSUL'S ADDRESS ON TRADE.

Mr. Cornelius Ferris, United States Consul-General in Dublin, in the course of a statement on trade with the United States, explained matters relating to the duties of a Consul, and said that his people in the United States were interested in anything affecting the purchasing power of Ireland.

Speaking of the Trade Opportunity Service, he said that trade opportunities were published in the reports issued from the Department of Industry and Commerce. Trade relations, in the main, would be through England from the United States for American produce, but certain lines of manufacture of the Irish Free State were sold regularly in the United States. In the case of Irish woollen goods, for instance, the trade was small, but it was steady, and as long as they were able to break through the protective wall behind which American woollen manufacturers stood they could do anything. He did not know of any industry in the United States so entrenched behind a tariff wall as the American woollen industry.

IRISH TWEEDS.

Irish tweeds were well known and desired in the United States. In that they had a line that was established and ought to grow. If they could do this in woollen goods they could do it in others. This trade in Irish woollen goods to the United States was increasing, as statistics showed. There were other goods that were not dealt in regularly by exporters, but were picked up by visitors to the Free State, such as horses, antiques and original paintings.

Mr. Ferris referred to the establishment of the Ford Factory in Cork, and said that Mr. Ford had not chosen Cork as a site for the factory because there was a great demand for his goods, but because he realised that Cork was a distributing centre of great advantage to them. The great field for their products at present was Russia, and that market could be reached from Cork as a strategic point better than from any other place. Anybody with the vision of Mr. Ford could see the possibilities of Cork, and it was a suggestion which kept him from looking on the dark side of Ireland's future trade. Cork was in the course of trade channels, and some day that fact would be taken advantage of by people of vision.

THE VALUE OF SELF-RELIANCE.

Senator O'Hanlon said that what pleased him most in the statement of Mr. Ferris was his attitude towards development in this country. What Mr. Ferris said showed that he was inclined to be helpful. They in Ireland look to distinguished citizens in a country like his to give them a push. They had learned a lesson in self-reliance, and if they were to penetrate the markets of the world they must produce the right article, and their business methods must be right. They recognised that they had to depend on themselves and their methods and their goods. They should find out what the other countries required, and then concentrate on manufacturing and exporting what would meet the necessities in other countries. There was a market for Ireland in America, and they should apply their capacity and industry to the production of more, and of better quality than what they had been already producing. He was proud to see that their Association was taking up such a subject and bringing a man like Mr. Ferris to speak. He hoped that these matters would continue to receive the attention of the Association.

Referring to the erection of the Ford factory in Cork, he expressed the view that at the back of the head of old Henry Ford there was a bit of love for the land of his forbears. They felt proud of the confidence that Henry Ford reposed in them, and also proud of the fact that they had made good.

Mr. Wood Hill (Messrs. Hill and Co.) paid a tribute to the work of the agents in the City of Dublin, and said that they were absolutely necessary to the principals and buyers of the various firms.

FOREIGN GOODS AS IRISH.

Mr. John Hanlby said that there were gentlemen present who knew of foreign goods that had been stamped as made in Ireland and sold as Irish goods. If every man in Ireland wore one pair of Irish pants their mills would be kept going full time.

Mr. W. H. McComas, Vice-President of the Association, proposed that their best thanks be given to Mr. Ferris for his address, and for the interesting things he had brought before them.

Mr. R. Hull, seconding, said that what they really lacked was self-reliance. They had failed to go into the markets and find out what exactly was required, as the Scottish woollen manufacturers had done.

MERRION FORESHORE RECLAMATION.

Proposing a vote of thanks to Senator O'Hanlon, Mr. T. F. Burke spoke of ways and means of fostering trade and commerce, and said that one of the primary moves to be made was to increase and improve export and import facilities. Looking into the future, Mr. Burke said that they would need an aerodrome adjacent to the city, and the location for that aerodrome was to be found on the great stretch of foreshore between Merrion Gates and Kingstown Pier. If a breakwater were erected from the West Pier, Kingstown, to the South Wall at the Pigeon House, acres upon acres of reclaimed land would be available on which to build one of the finest civil aerodromes in the world. Many of them had seen the great breakwater at Holyhead, and it was something of that kind he had in mind.

On the line of the breakwater they could erect a length of piers that would relieve the congestion on the Liffey. The advantages of this scheme to trade and commerce and to the future of Dublin could be well realised. It was a big proposition, entailing a great relief was to be distributed during the the coming year. In the past year something like £240,000 had been spent in the relief of unemployment. He suggested that this sum should be used to give the unemployed work to do on the building of this great breakwater and the reclamation of that waste land.

Mr. Joseph Hart seconded the vote, which was passed unanimously.

THE REPORT.

In the report of the Association, which was adopted, it was stated that there had been an increase in the membership over 1923. The Committee, however, felt that more useful work could be accomplished by a larger representation of agents other than textile agents on the membership roll.

CHURCH OF IRELAND.

INTERCESSION FOR UNITY.

The House of Bishops of the Church of Ireland has appointed Sunday, January 12th, as a day of intercession for unity in the Christian Churches. It is hoped that in all the churches, not only will intercession be offered, but the opportunity will be taken to give instruction upon this vital Christian principle, especially in view of recent movements in the mission field towards a union of religious agencies which now work separately. A recommendation in regard to this subject was circulated recently to all the clergy from the Home Reunion Committee. To the list of books, etc., then recommended may be added a pamphlet entitled "Watersmeet," by Dr. Palmer, formerly Bishop of Bombay, and "Church Union in South India," by the present Bishop of Madras. Special prayers sanctioned by the Archbishop may be obtained at the A.P.C.K., 37 Dawson street, Dublin.

The Grand Duke Boris of Russia, accompanied by the Grand Duchess, landed at Cherbourg yesterday from the Mauretania.—(Reuter.)

ILL-TREATING A CROW.

An unusual prosecution was heard in JULIANSTOWN District Court yesterday, before Justice Goff, when Patrick Black, of Bellewstown, was summoned for cruelly ill-treating a crow by hanging it in a field by the leg when in a wounded condition. Guard Puzzan gave evidence of finding a live crow hanging by the leg in a field at Bellewstown. Defendant said that there was wheat sown in the field, where crows collected in great numbers every day and did a great deal of damage. He set some traps, and, having caught one crow, hung it up by the leg on a post to keep the other birds away. Justice—The crows are great robbers, but they have feelings, you know. Defendant—If I killed him it would be crueller. Justice—Oh, no! To kill him when you found him alive in the trap would have been the proper thing to do. I am satisfied that you did not know it was an offence, and will let you off with a fine of one shilling.

DERRY CLUB EXPLOSION.

At DERRY Recorder's Court yesterday, before Judge Osborne, Mr. Hume Babington mentioned a claim for compensation for the malicious damage caused recently to the Northern Counties Club, Derry, by an explosion. The Judge said that it would be very difficult for him, being a member of the club, to hear the claim. Mr. Babington said that he did not think there would be any difficulty. Both he, for the applicant, and Sir Henry Miller, the city solicitor, for the respondents, would be content to leave the hearing to his Honour. They were of opinion that there would not be much for his Honour to decide. The Judge—If you think it will not be a very much controverted case it will be all right, but if it is a case that will be fought vigorously I do not think that I, being a member of the club, should hear it. Mr. Babington said that his Honour would not be troubled with a disputed case. The Judge said that, under the circumstances, he would agree to hear the case on January 10.

MOTOR ACCIDENTS.

Two men were seriously injured in motor accidents at BALBRIGGAN. Mr. M. McNally, Balgee, was driving his pony and trap home from Balbriggan when, at Knock, about two miles from the town, a motor lorry came behind, and, colliding with Mr. McNally's pony and trap, threw them into the ditch. The pony was unhurt, but Mr. McNally was badly injured. He was promptly attended by a doctor and removed to his home. Last Tuesday morning, at the same spot where a serious motor accident occurred last week, Mr. Martin Hand, of Balrothery, was walking along the footpath when, failing to hear the approach of an oncoming motor car, he stepped out on the road to avoid a pool of water on the path, and was struck by the car. He was carried some distance on the right-hand mudguard, and, falling on the road, received severe injuries to his back. He was taken to Dr. Fulham's, where he received medical treatment, and was then brought home. The driver of the car, in swerving to avoid Mr. Hand, ran the car into the ditch, whence it was only removed with considerable difficulty.

All the bedclothing and property of the two men were destroyed.

CRUELTY TO A HORSE.

At KINGSTOWN District Court yesterday Thomas Duffy was charged by Civic Guard 118 F with cruelty to a horse. The Guard said he saw a workman beating it on the head and neck and ribs with an iron tube. The cart was heavily laden with wet manure. Mr. Duffy, owner of the horse, stated that the workman in charge of the cart and horse had since gone to his home in Tipperary, and the case was adjourned generally.

WATERFORD CHILDREN'S PARTY.

Gallwey, Mrs. Carew, Mrs. Allen, Miss Kenny, Miss Westcott, Dunmore, and other ladies were present yesterday evening at a party given by the WATERFORD Women's Branch, British Legion, to over two hundred children of local ex-Service men. A huge Christmas Tree, laden with toys and brilliantly illuminated, stood in the centre of the long room, from which toys were distributed by a committee member dressed as Santa Claus.

COUNCIL SCENE.

At the meeting of the South Tipperary County Council lively exchanges took place between Mr. R. Curran and Mr. T. Morrissey, Carrick, with regard to the employment of workers on the roads in the Carrick-on-Suir area. The scene started when Mr. Curran said that some of the labourers complained to him about a man named Kiely being brought to the Clonmel area and getting priority in work, and also about favouritism in the distribution of work in the Carrick area. Eventually order was restored after the Chairman had threatened to adjourn the meeting.

HORSE-BREEDING SCHEME

When MARYBOROUGH County Committee of Agriculture and Technical Instruction received an application to have a Clydesdale horse registered under the Committee's horse-breeding scheme, Mr. D. Kennedy, opposing the application, said that the intention of the Council Council in providing funds for the revival of the scheme was to encourage the production of the Irish draught horse and hunters, and at the mare shows to select mares suitable for those purposes. Mr. R. F. Seale, a well-known breeder of hunters, agreed with Mr. Kennedy, and the Committee refused the application.

THE THRIFT MOVEMENT

A meeting to form a local savings' committee for Gorey district was held at GOREY yesterday. Mr. T. P. Gill, Chairman of the Central Savings' Committee, was accidentally prevented from attending, and he sent a telegram to the chairman of the meeting, stating that he was confident that the County Wexford, now forming its fourth local savings' committee, would confirm his prediction of last March and make a characteristic record of its own in this great movement. Constructive thrift, in its true conception, economically and educationally, was a sheer necessity for their people, especially at the present time.

RAIDERS FOILED.

Raiders, who are alleged to have been armed with a sledge hammer, stolen from a milesman's tool box on the railway line, broke into CARRIGTWOHILL, Co. Cork, Great Southern Railway Station last Wednesday night, gaining an entrance from the waiting-room adjoining the stationmaster's office, which they subsequently entered. Drawers of every description were ransacked, and, finally, the safe, embedded in the wall, was attacked with a sledge hammer. All attempts to break open the safe failed. The raiders were compelled to leave without having apparently gained their objective. Before their departure, it was stated, several revolver shots were discharged in the neighbourhood of the station.

THE GRAIN COMMISSION.

Speaking at a meeting which was held at TULLAMORE last Wednesday under the auspices of the Grain Growers' Association, Mr. J. J. Bergin, secretary, said that they expected the report of the Commission towards the end of January. The reason they wished for an immediate report or decision was that they all knew that there would be a serious decline in tillage now unless some hope was held out to the tillage farmer. Mr. Hogan's policy was: If you have more grain than you can consume feed it to your pigs; and to the farmers of Cavan, Kerry and West Cork he says: Feed your pigs on maize. Mr. J. P. Bowles said that if something was not done to improve agriculture from the tillage point of view they would have no country left soon.

£44,000 STREET SCHEME.

The streets reconstruction scheme which has been in progress in LURGAN for the past eighteen months now has been completed. The larger contract amounted to approximately £35,000, and the minor one to close on £9,000. The entire work has been satisfactorily carried out both to the local Urban Council and all concerned, and was under the superintendence of Mr. A. E. McKinley, resident engineer; Mr. W. R. Rutherford, C.E., Town Surveyor, Lurgan, and Mr. James Barclay and Mr. G. Boyd, clerks of works. Both contracts gave a considerable amount of employment, especially to the labouring classes. The streets of the town now present a splendid appearance. The loans for the scheme were granted by the Northern Ministry.

STORM IN DERRY.

THUNDER, LIGHTNING AND RAIN.

During a fierce storm which swept over Derry early yesterday morning the weather vane on the tower of the Guildhall, weighing half a hundredweight, was blown off, falling on the street. It was badly damaged.

A lighter, with fifty-five tons of coal as cargo, while berthed at the quay became swamped and sank. The barge turned completely over, throwing the cargo into the water. At low tide it may be possible to recover the vessel.

The storm, which broke before midnight, was accompanied by thunder and lightning and a downpour of rain.

CITIZEN SOLDIERS.

FREE STATE VOLUNTEER RESERVE FORCE.

BROADCAST TALK FROM 2RN.

Dealing with "The Volunteer Reserve," in a broadcast from the Dublin Broadcasting Station, 2RN, last night, Major Archer, of the Irish Free State Army, said that he was convinced that deep down in the hearts of the citizens there is a solid conviction of the necessity for, and importance of, a National Defence Force.

"In considering the nature and size of these forces," he said, "the primary factor is our economic resources. The cost of a standing Army large enough to withstand external aggression would be prohibitive, and conscription is not feasible. Conditions, therefore, dictate that our Army in future should consist in the main of citizen soldiers—that is, men who are prepared to devote a portion of their spare time to learning the profession of arms."

"The strength of the present Army is approximately 5,800. Coupled with this force we have the A Reserve of 3,400 ex-regulars, who exist for the purpose of bringing the regular units up to war strength on mobilisation in time of emergency. In addition, we have the B Reserve of 3,420, a body of second line troops, who initially perform only three months' service in the forces and subsequently one month's training in the year. We have thus a total force of 12,863, including officers.

"The main purpose of the regular forces in future will be the training of the non-regular forces and the performance of such duties which can only be successfully handled by the regular units.

NATIONAL SECURITY.

"Wars of recent years have not been confined to the actual combatants. They have embraced entire nations. Man-power is, therefore, one of the primary considerations in dealing with national security. It is felt that this problem can best be met in this country by the creation of a citizen army. Valuable blood and treasure are wasted by lack of preparedness. When war occurs is not the time to prepare; then must be done during peace. Now is the time.

"It is for these reasons that the Government has decided to launch the Volunteer Class of the Army Reserve. This class will consist of men who, in the daytime carry on their ordinary occupations, and in the evening devote a few hours to military training once a week. These three hours are occupied by drill, musketry, physical training, etc.; in fact, all subjects which come under the broad heading of military training. The maximum number of such parades is forty, and the volunteer is expected to attend at least thirty of these.

"The volunteer will also be expected to attend four week-end camps (Saturday evening and Sunday) for actual musketry practices, in order to perfect himself as a rifleman; and as he must know as much about the rudiments of warfare as can be taught during peace, he attends from 7 to 15 days in a summer camp for training in tactics.

"He receives full uniform and military equipment on joining the force and attends all drills and training parades in uniform, which he retains in his own possession. When in camp he is accommodated and fed at the expense of the State. Normally six to eight men will be located in a tent, and a separate mess-room, consisting of a marquee, will be provided.

GRANTS TO ALL RANKS.

"Grants as set forth hereafter are payable to all men who attend the annual training camp, and whose attendances at drills equal 75 per cent. of the total number ordered for his unit:—Private, £5; corporal, £8; sergeant, £10; C.Q.M.S., £11; company sergeant, £12; B.Q.M.S., £13; B.S.M., £15. Additional payments for attendance at all drills in excess of the number already mentioned are made ranging from 2s. per drill for a private to 7s. 6d. per drill for a B.S.M.

"With the exception of one administrative appointment, which is held by a regular officer, all appointments of officers and N.C.O.'s in Volunteer Units will be held by Volunteers only.

"There are almost 9,000 hours in the year. The Volunteer is asked to give from 300 to 500 hours in the year to the task of fitting himself to scientifically to defend his country. Surely this is not too much to ask for. The gains are many—Scientific physical training, improved health, interesting occupation, new friendships, enhanced self-reliance, mental and physical discipline, invaluable knowledge of the profession of arms, a free and enjoyable holiday.

CALLS FOR SERVICE.

"The volunteer can only be called up for service in case of imminent national danger or great emergency; to aid the civil power in the preservation of public order; for training, exercise or drill. The first of these means war or the threat of war. The second would have to be of such a magnitude that it threatened the very fabric of the State itself and could not be dealt with by the forces already in being. The third has already been covered.

"The volunteers' commitments are clear and precise, and include nothing that any man who has the welfare of his country at heart can find fault with. The State is anxious to facilitate the volunteer by allowing friends and associates to serve together. It will go so far as to permit the formation of separate units composed of men of kindred interests. Thus, if members of athletic clubs offer themselves in sufficient numbers, they will be encouraged to form platoons or companies, as the case may be. Similarly, men who wish to serve in special Corps—Air, Artillery, Engineers, Signals, etc.—may on attestation signify their wish to do so, and on the completion of their basic training and on the formation of volunteer units of these Corps they will be immediately transferred thereto.

A FINAL WORD.

"Similarly it is proposed to meet as far as possible the difficulties of employers, but it expects co-operation from employers in making the scheme a success.

"A special plea to employers—Stability helps business. A force of the nature described makes for stability. Healthy, disciplined, self-reliant and trained employés produce better work. Better work means efficiency, and efficiency is good business.

"A final word—This question of national defence is not a matter of party politics; it is the concern of the nation, without distinction as to party, class or creed. It is above politics, religion and class. War knows no distinctions, neither does the Army. The Army is the servant of the State. Changes of Government do not concern it. The volunteer class is open to all who are willing to defend our motherland in a spirit of generous service.

"Further details," Major Archer concluded, "can be obtained on application at the General Post Office; at the Post Office, College Green; at 1st Volunteer Reserve Battalion Headquarters, Portobello Barracks, or on direct application to me at the Department of Defence."

CHILDREN'S NEW YEAR PARTY.

MERRIMENT IN THE SAVOY RESTAURANT.

A jolly children's New Year party and cabaret entertainment was given in the Savoy Restaurant, Dublin, yesterday afternoon in aid of the Holles Street Hospital. It was attended by over two hundred children and adults, and it was noticeable that in many cases the adults entered into the fun just as whole-heartedly as did the children. Some of the children came in fancy dress, the most novel of which were those worn by two tiny tots who represented "Mutt and Jeff."

There was a Christmas tree from which the children received presents, and a number of excellent cabaret turns by pupils of Miss Evelyn Burchill. George Hornaby and the Savoy Band, dressed in fancy costumes, went through their programme in a droll manner that kept the children in shrieks of laughter, some of them dancing to certain numbers with more energy than precision.

Mr. W. Walker, of the Savoy Ballroom, had charge of the arrangements.

RUGBY.

LANSDOWNE'S SUCCESS IN THE SOUTH.

BACKS TOO GOOD FOR BOHEMIANS.

Lansdowne visited Limerick yesterday and played Bohemians in a friendly at the Markets Field, which was cut up and holding, consequent to the recent heavy rains. This militated against the game, which was slow and rather scrappy. Territorially Lansdowne had the advantage, and the scores they registered were the result of straight running by the backs and clean passing. The game was watched by a large crowd in fine weather.

Early on Lansdowne got inside the home 25, and their forwards feeling smartly from the scrum, O'Reilly gathered and, running strong, dodged the opposition to score far out. Davy just failed with the goal kick. Following lively play at the centre, the Lansdowne backs got under way, and after Davy had sent out a long pass to Lightfoot, the latter was brought down by Ryan just outside. From the subsequent line out and scrum O'Reilly got hold, and slipped across for a try, which was not improved.

Being six points in arrears at the interval, Bohemians soon after came away in a loose burst to the visitors' 25, where Ryan gathered and beat Moran for the line. Wellwood did not add the points, and a moment later Lansdowne, from a passing movement, scored through Lightfoot, but Moran failed to goal. It was the visitors' game to the end, and before the final whistle O'Reilly dropped a goal. Result—

Lansdowne—1 dropped goal 3 tries (13 points).
Bohemians—1 try (3 points).

WANDERERS 3RD ON TOUR.

MATCHES IN CAVAN AND MONAGHAN.

Wanderers 3rd XV. were engaged upon a short tour in Co. Cavan and Co. Monaghan over the New Year. On Wednesday they played Co. Cavan at Cootehill, and were beaten by 2 tries to nil. McKay scoring for the home team. The Cavan victory was almost entirely due to the forwards, who controlled the ball admirably on a ground ill suited to back play.

Yesterday Wanderers defeated Co. Monaghan by 1 penalty goal 2 tries (9 points) to nil. Patterson and Breakey (R. D. B.) scored the tries, and Cleland kicked a penalty goal from long range. The Wanderers' forwards were more successful in the set scrimmages on this occasion, and a clever back division used its opportunities to the full. Wanderers were best represented by Gill, Pilkington and Jones (forwards), and Buchanan, Patterson and Cleland (backs).

G. V. STEPHENSON SCORES TWO TRIES.

LONDON HOSPITAL DEFEAT NORTHAMPTON.

About fifteen hundred people watched an interesting game at Northampton yesterday, when London Hospital defeated the home side by 4 tries (12 points) to 1 try (3 points).

London Hospital, who were below full strength, as were Northampton, owed a great deal to the fine play of their captain, G. V. Stephenson, the Irish international. Early in the game Stephenson broke through the Northampton defence, and gave the Hospital the lead, while soon after the change of ends he gained another clever try. Northampton, whose forwards often attacked smartly, got on terms through Tuck, after Stephenson got his first try; but the Hospital went ahead again through O'Sullivan, and in the second half the visitors, always the more dangerous side, obtained two further tries, Stephenson (as already mentioned) and Skinner crossing. Result—

London Hospital—4 tries (12 points).
Northampton—1 try (3 points).

The third and final Test match between Australia and England will be decided at Swinton on to-morrow, and particular interest attaches to the game, because at the moment the honours are even. So far the Australian touring team have played 3a matches and won 22. They have lost eight times, and the other fixture had to be abandoned. In the first Test match England won by 31 points to 8, while Australia proved successful at the second meeting at Leeds by 9 points to 3.

ICE HOCKEY.

CAMBRIDGE DEFEAT BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

ST. MORITZ, Thursday.

Cambridge University ice hockey team this afternoon beat the British Ice Hockey Association team by 2 goals to nil. The game was a very fast one, and Speechly's goalkeeping against the British Association team's fine shooting was a feature. Both sides shot well, but the Light Blues' team work was much superior.

CANADIANS DEFEAT SWEDES.

BERLIN, Thursday.

The ice hockey match between the National Canadians and the Swedish National team was an extremely swift one, both having excellent goalkeepers, the former in Simpson and the latter in Lackscoff. The Canadians won by 2 goals to nil.

In the beginning both sides were cautious, but the Canadians were soon before their opponents' goal, though all attempts to shoot failed. In the second period the good work of Lackscoff again stemmed the Canadians' efforts. In the last part of the game, when the Canadians were again before the Swedish goal, the latter's goalkeeper was so hampered by his own men that he could not prevent the ball from entering the net. After hard skirmishes the Canadian goal was repeatedly in danger, but the Canadians succeeded in scoring a second time, both goals having been shot by Armstrong.

The Fascist Regime.

The arrest in Paris of three Italian journalists has set the international telegraph wires humming with thrilling stories of anti-Fascist plots. On such occasions rumour must be treated with the utmost reserve; but the French Sureté does not catch fright easily, and the fact that the police take a serious view of the situation suggests that something unusually grave is afoot. The three men who have been arrested are members of the "Anti-Fascist Concentration," a well-known society of exiled Italians. They are believed to have been in close touch with Di Rosa, the young man who tried to murder the Italian Crown Prince in Brussels recently; and the police allege that they were concerned in a conspiracy to make a further attempt on Prince Humbert's life on the occasion of his forthcoming wedding in Rome. Their arrest followed the interception of certain documents, which indicated that the three men had a quantity of dangerous explosives in their lodgings. When the police made a search they discovered the constituent parts of infernal machines, as well as a mass of documentary evidence of a widespread organisation. One of the accused men is a distinguished journalist, who formerly was editor of the Corriere della Sera, the famous Milanese newspaper, and also was a member of the Italian Chamber of Deputies. His two companions are persons of minor importance; but it seems that the case against all three is so strong that no fewer than one hundred and fifty separate dossiers have been prepared by the Paris police.

When the attack was made on Prince Humbert in Brussels the Fascist Press protested that France was encouraging malcontents to stir up trouble. The prompt action of the Paris police now must convince the most ardent supporter of the Duce's rule that France is perfectly correct in her attitude. Paris naturally is a centre for conspirators of every nationality; for it is the most cosmopolitan place in the world. The present régime in Italy invites subterranean attack. Signor Mussolini, in his wholehearted effort to reform his country, has stifled all legitimate criticism. Parliament and Press alike have been silenced, and no Italian citizen dares to open his mouth in protest against the dictatorship. All history, however, teaches that despotism cannot endure. Tyranny breeds fanaticism, and the fact that a man who edited the Corriere should be implicated in murderous plots is a grave warning. After all, the risorgimento is only sixty years old. Its great leaders inspired the Italian people with ideals of national and personal liberty, from which the principles of Fascism are entirely alien; and, much as we must deplore the criminal activities of frenzied fanatics, they are part of the price of absolute rule.

One of the most unfortunate features of the anti-Fascist campaign is that it should be directed, even in part, against Italy's Royal Family. The House of Savoy has deserved well of its country. Its record has been unblemished, and the fighting spirit which was shown by the present King during the war was an inspiration to the whole Italian people. The attack on Prince Humbert was a cowardly outrage. King Victor is a constitutional monarch. He has accepted the Fascist régime for the same reason which impelled millions of his subjects to accept it—namely, because he had no reasonable alternative. The Fascist Government now has been in power for nearly seven years, and it has done many fine things for Italy. Nobody can deprive Signor Mussolini of the credit that is due to him for the way in which he has transformed lethargy into enthusiasm and idleness into hard work; but, for all that, his Government has no popular warrant. The time must come when Fascism will yield to some measure of parliamentary government, and until that time comes there always will be a danger of violence. In Spain the Marquès de Estella has recognised the impossibility of a permanent dictatorship, and is preparing a gradual return to normal conditions. Signor Mussolini, however, refuses to make any compromise with the inevitable.

Art and the Citizen.

As the islands of Hellas sent ships to Troy, so, from many galleries, noble pictures have come to London's Exhibition of Italian Art. It is, indeed, the greatest display of the greatest art that ever has been shown under a single roof, and England owes an enduring debt alike to the old Italy and to the new. To-day we give photographs of the four paintings which the National Gallery of Ireland has contributed to the Exhibition. All are precious, and there is one—Mantegna's "Judith with the Head of Holophernes"—on whose account Florence and Rome envy Dublin. For two good reasons we rejoice in this contribution. It establishes Ireland's official place as a discerning and well-endowed cultivator of the arts, and it is an appeal to the popular intelligence. The London Exhibition was heralded, and is attended, with copious advertisement of the Italian masters. Many thousands of people will see the pictures; a far larger number will acquire from magazines and newspapers a scrambled, knowledge—yet some knowledge—of the masters' lives and accomplishment. We must believe that not all the seed will fall on stony ground. The average citizen's attitude to pictures is simple and sincere. He likes pictures that tell plain stories pathetically or dramatically; and so Sir Luke Fildes's "The Doctor" and Orchardson's "Napoleon on the Bellerophon" decorate innumerable dining-rooms. He is apt to become resentful when expert persons insist that he ought to admire something which his heart refuses to admire. His suspicion that the art critics are a conspiracy of humbugs, like Gibbon's augurs, is strengthened by the palpable ugliness and absurdity of some modern "movements" that have enthusiastic camp-followers. A really great picture has the quality of science's new rays. It pierces the armour of indifference and compels even ignorance to recognise that, for some reason and in some fashion, it is great. Such a picture is Botticelli's "Birth of Venus" which Florence has lent to London: even the newspaper reproductions preserve the wonder of its linear design. The plain man who is moved by this, or some other, great picture to study the story of Italian painting—say, in Sir Charles Holmes's "Introduction"—embarks straightways on a fascinating adventure. He will learn how the Byzantine tradition affected the early painters; how, under the reviving influence of the ancients, the school of Florence gave science, form and beauty to the art; how the command of colour, Venice's secret, culminated in the glories of Titian. In learning these things the plain man will learn to look at pictures and to enjoy them; he will learn to distinguish between genius and mere cleverness in art; incidentally, he will travel in one of the mightiest and most stirring ages of history. We hope, then, that the London Exhibition, and Ireland's contribution to it, will endow many Irish minds with an intelligent interest in art; and, if they begin with Italy, Holland and England will not fail to beckon them onwards. For such minds our National Gallery soon will cease to be a mere symbol of capitaldom, and will become an ever-flowering garden of delight.

National Records.

Year by year those who reverence the past are stirred to admiration by the progress of the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland. The latest annual report, which is signed by Dr. D. A. Chart, the Deputy-Keeper, reveals fresh achievement. Hundreds of documents have been purchased or received as gifts. Among those bought are old estate records, military papers, lists of suspects and prisoners, dating from the troubled years 1796-1799. Among original documents presented to the Record Office are marriage settlements, deeds and clerical visitation books. Copies of many records, the originals of which were lost in Dublin's holocaust of 1922, have been given by persons who had transcribed data. Many important papers were lent by owners in order that copies should be taken. Most notable of these last are letters by John Mitchel, written from Van Diemen's Land and the United States of America between the years 1852-1855. Mitchel's defence of slavery caused sore offence in the Northern States. He gives a bitter account of the New Englanders—"so solemn, so grim, so penitential look these sickly-looking thin men and grim, meagre, hard women of dismal intelligence." In one letter he prophesies—as Dr. Chart says in summary—"that the independence of Ireland may not come until a revolution breaks out in England, in which event the English aristocracy and the Irish Catholic clergy might make alliance and hold Ireland as a last stronghold": Mitchel's own phrase is "the Vendée of the British Revolution." Most remarkable in the report is not the great number of documents acquired, although the volume of papers promises for Ulster a general reconstruction of her past, but the earnest co-operation of Northern folk, at home and abroad, which is manifested. Every citizen who has transcribed a genealogical table seems glad, if not eager, to lodge a copy in Dr. Chart's archives. Wisely, all such help is welcomed. It is announced in the report that a printed selection from the letters of Dr. William Drennan, dating from 1775 to 1819, is being prepared for issue to subscribers. These letters throw light on the political and social history of a stirring age; they also contain hundreds of names of individuals, and thus link hundreds of Northern families with events of national moment.

Marriage by Committee.

The influence obtained by the partisans of the Austro-German "Anschluss" has stimulated its opponents, who desire a rapprochement with France, to strange endeavour. According to the Special Correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, a rival society has been formed which proposes to improve Franco-Austrian relations by fifty marriages. A committee in Vienna will guarantee the blamelessness of such Viennese damsels as are ready to place their matrimonial futures at the service of the cause. Furthermore, the committee will instruct them in the French language and will provide them with the dot, without which no right-thinking Frenchman will take a wife. The Matin, we understand, has now taken up the idea and has published photographs of six Viennese beauties in its columns, with the result that there is minor fluttering of French hearts. Although cynics are confident that the remainder will not be up to sample, a reciprocal committee has been established in Paris for the export—we can call it nothing else—of French girls of equal probity and, as we suppose, equally dowered. We are not told how the husbands will be selected, but, doubtless, these enterprising committees have made full arrangements to meet the difficulty. Nevertheless, we cannot believe that artificially contrived marriages are likely to promote cordiality between Austria and France. Inevitably trouble will arise over the dowries, and ill-mated husbands and wives will warn their children against weddings with foreigners. On the whole, the Austrian Government, which has been inundated with protests, will be well-advised if it suppresses the "Political Marriage Bureau."

LINEN RESEARCH DEVELOPMENTS.

EXPERIMENTS WITH PEDIGREE SEED.

Considerable progress has been made during the past year, on the initiative of the Flax and Fibre Production Department of the Linen Industry Research Association, at Lambeg, Belfast, in the development of the J.W.S. pedigree flax seed, which produces a yield of flax fibre more than double that of ordinary flax seed. This seed will be sown this year on a commercial basis in Northern Ireland and elsewhere, with a total acreage exceeding 12,500 acres.

GRANTS FOR RESEARCH.

The Research Institute has now concentrated on the method of production of the flax fibre from the straw, such as the operations of retting, breaking, and scutching, since it is certain that the average yield and quality of flax fibre secured from the flax crop is greatly reduced by the manner in which these operations are being performed. It is proposed to investigate these processes of fibre production on a full manufacturing scale, and, as a result of the Association's application to the Empire Marketing Board, a sum of £18,750 has now been granted, so that, together with the contribution promised by the Government of Northern Ireland, funds are provided amounting to £3,000 for capital expenditure and £5,000 per annum for five years for maintenance purposes for the development of research into the problems of flax growing and fibre production.

REFEREE WITH A TRUMPET.

WHY TOREADORS WON A FOOTBALL MATCH.

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.

MADRID, Thursday.

The Metropolitan Stadium here was the scene to-day of an Association football match between a team composed exclusively of toreadors and a team of veteran footballers. Contrary to all expectations, the toreadors' team won by four goals to one. They were doubtless assisted by the unorthodox way in which the match was conducted; for, instead of the usual whistle, the referee was armed with a trumpet, and each time a goal was scored by the bull-fighters the band played the triumphal music with which the death of the bull is usually acclaimed.

An enormous crowd attended this somewhat singular football match.

ANTI-FASCIST PLOT.

BIG ORGANISATION DISCOVERED.

EXPLOSIVES IN PARIS FLAT.

MURDER PLANS FOR ROYAL WEDDING.

According to a message from Reuter's Paris Correspondent, there had been no further developments up to last evening in the case of the three Italians who were arrested three days ago with explosives in their possession.

The authorities are still examining the documents found at the Paris residences of the three men. Many of these documents are in cipher, and it is believed that their translation will reveal a widespread and well-organised anti-Fascist conspiracy in France and elsewhere.

THREE JOURNALISTS.

The usually well-informed Paris Correspondent of the Daily Telegraph throws a good deal of additional light on the case. He states that the three men in custody are journalists.

Two of them, Alberto Cianca and Giuseppe Sardelli, wrote for anti-Fascist papers. The former is a member of the Paris bureau of the "Anti-Fascist Concentration" and a very influential militant. In his early days he studied law, and then became a journalist.

Giuseppe Sardelli, who is known as "Marcel Martin," was formerly a Socialist deputy, and at Rome he was the champion of the workmen and tramcar employés.

The third, Alberto Tarchiani, is a more important personage. Before the Mussolini régime got rid of its adversaries he was editor of the Corriere della Sera, of Milan, which was then regarded as the best paper in Italy. Later he was New York Correspondent of the Nuovo Giornale, of Florence. He had also been a member of the Italian Chamber, but he was an opponent of Fascism from the first, and, with his family, left Italy for Paris. Like Cianca, he and Sardelli belong to a secret anti-Fascist organisation, and all have lived in France for some time.

Their arrest, the Telegraph Correspondent states, was brought about by the Italian Embassy here. At the time of the arrest in Brussels of Professor Bernieri the Italian and Belgian police found that there were relations between him and the three Italians.

PHRASE IN INTERCEPTED NOTE.

Recently an Italian detective intercepted a letter-telegram addressed to Cianca. A certain phrase in this led him to believe that an infernal machine was being prepared in the flat of Cianca and Sardelli. The discovery was reported to the Italian Embassy, which lodged a complaint with the French authorities.

Professor Bernieri was at the head of the Anti-Fascist Committee of Paris, and after his arrest the Committee was directed by the three Italians now in the Santé Prison. A phrase in an intercepted letter which aroused the suspicion of the detectives was: "The infant is very delicate. He is afraid of the cold, and it is prudent to keep him in healthy surroundings." The "infant," it was assumed, was an infernal machine.

It was after this discovery that it was decided to make a search in a house in the Rue de la Santé in which the explosives were found, as well as several sealed packets of documents and secret ciphers.

AT THE ROYAL MARRIAGE.

At first, the three Italians denied the evidence furnished by this discovery, but they finally confessed to detectives of the Sûreté Générale that bomb outrages were being prepared outside France.

They also gave a hint that plans were being laid for an attempt on the lives of distinguished personages at the marriage of the Princess José and Prince Humbert in Italy.

The two men refused to indicate the use to which the explosives found in their possession were to be put, but according to the police they were to be used against the Italian delegation to the League of Nations at Geneva on January 15th.

A large and heavy box was delivered at Cianca's flat about eight days ago. It was addressed to a young woman who lives there, and is supposed to have contained the explosives. These consisted of 15½lb. of cheddite, seven detonators, and about 60ft. of Bickford fuse—sufficient for the construction of several powerful infernal machines.

The French Sûreté Générale, according to the Daily Telegraph Correspondent, has for a long time been investigating the operations of anti-Fascists domiciled in France. It has discovered that the men now in custody were in close touch with Di Rosa, who was arrested in Brussels for attempting the life of the Italian Crown Prince, as well as with Bernieri.

WIDESPREAD ORGANISATION.

The detectives believe that they have unearthed a widespread organisation which has been responsible for the numerous political crimes recently committed in France and Belgium, including several on the Côte d'Azur, notably the bomb outrage at Juan-les-Pins.

A mass of evidence has been collected regarding the activities of the Italian revolutionaries. Some of the letters seized at Cianca's flat went to show that the three men had under their orders many young men who were prepared for desperate deeds.

MR. SNOWDEN STARTS FOR THE HAGUE.

"WORK LESS ARDUOUS THIS TIME."

There was a fairly large crowd at Liverpool Street Station, London, last night, when Mr. Philip Snowden, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Mr. William Graham, President of the Board of Trade, left for The Hague to attend the Reparations Conference. Mr. Snowden walked to his reserved compartment on the arm of Mrs. Snowden, who is again accompanying him.

To a Press Association reporter Mr. Snowden said: "I do not think that this time our work will be as arduous as it was last time. The preparation has been much more thorough, the various Committees have got through an immense amount of work, and it is left for the delegates to fit together the loose ends."

TRAMS BOMBED IN NEW ORLEANS.

POLICE ORDERED TO "SHOOT TO KILL."

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.
NEW ORLEANS, Thursday.

The Chief of Police has ordered men on duty at night to arm themselves heavily, and to capture or kill persons attempting to bomb trams.

The official order says: "Shoot to kill, if necessary; but, at all costs, get the men who are dynamiting trams."

The Union of Tram Drivers and Conductors has been on strike since July. Since New Year's Day three trams have been bombed. Over twenty trams have been dynamited since the strike began.

HERR VON DEHN.

NEW APPOINTMENT AT DUBLIN.

CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES FOR GERMAN REICH.

Herr von Dehn, Consul-General for Germany in Dublin, yesterday morning presented to the Free State Minister for External Affairs his letter of appointment as Chargé d'Affaires at Dublin for the German Reich.

In doing so he expressed the earnest wish of his Government that this beginning of direct diplomatic relations would give a new impetus to the friendly movement for closer trade and cultural relations between the two countries.

The Minister expressed his cordial agreement with these sentiments, and added that it gave the Irish Government particular pleasure that Herr von Dehn, who had done so much to promote German-Irish good-will, had been appointed as the first German diplomatic representative in this country.

A DISTINGUISHED CAREER.

Herr Georg von Dehn, who has been appointed German Chargé d'Affaires, is well known in Dublin, where he has been acting as Consul-General since November, 1923. A native of Guhran, in Silesia, Herr von Dehn is a man of wide culture, and has become very popular among a large circle of friends in Ireland. He is an active member of the All-Ireland Polo Club, as well as a regular follower of the Ward Union Stag Hounds. He also takes a keen interest in the drama, being a frequent attendant at the Abbey Theatre.

Herr von Dehn studied at the Universities of Jena, Halle, Breslau and Berlin, and became Doctor of Laws in the last-mentioned university. He also holds degrees in Civil and Roman Law. His first appointment in the Consular service was at Amsterdam, whence he was transferred to The Hague. Before the war he was attached to the Staff of the German Embassy in London, under Prince Lichnowsky, and when diplomatic relations were severed he was recalled to Germany.

WAR SERVICES.

He joined the cavalry, and held a commission in a famous regiment of Cuirassiers, being wounded severely on the Russian front. When the war was over he was sent back to London, and shortly afterwards went to Liverpool, where he opened the first German Consulate in England, remaining in Liverpool from 1921 until June, 1923. In November of that year Herr von Dehn came to Dublin as Consul-General to the Free State.

His elevation to diplomatic rank follows the appointment of Mr. Binchy as Free State Minister to the German Reich.

PASSENGER 'PLANES COLLIDE.

TEN PERSONS KILLED IN CALIFORNIAN CRASH.

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.
SANTA MONICA, CALIFORNIA, Thursday.

Two commercial cabin aeroplanes, each believed to be carrying five persons, collided three miles off the shore near here, and plunged into the ocean.

It is feared that all on board have been killed.

One of the passengers was Mr. Kenneth Hawks, the well-known cinema director, whose brother William recently married Miss Bessie Love, the leading actress of "Broadway Melody" and other "talkies."

NEW THEORY ABOUT TUBERCULOSIS.

SUGAR SUBSTANCE AS THE IMMEDIATE CAUSE.

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.
DES MOINES, IOWA, Thursday.

A new theory with regard to tuberculosis was put forward in an address given before the American Association for the Advancement of Science by Dr. W. C. White, of the Federal Public Health Service.

Dr. White described the discovery of a sugar substance generated by tuberculosis germs, which, he said, acts apparently as an agent of union between the tuberculosis bacillus and the human cell, and, therefore, may be regarded as the immediate cause of tuberculosis. He expressed the opinion that it was quite possible that, by striking at this sugar product and interrupting its chemical function, a cure for tuberculosis might be effected.

Dr. White is chairman of the Medical Research Committee of the National Tuberculosis Association. He directed the American Division for the relief and prevention of tuberculosis in France during the last years of the war and in Italy immediately after the armistice.

NEW YORK'S DRUNKEN HOGMANAY.

3 DEAD: 79 IN HOSPITAL: 20 STABBED: 4 SHOT.

EXCHANGE TELEGRAM.
NEW YORK, Thursday.

An early survey of the casualties in New York City's noisiest and merriest New Year celebrations for many years reveals three persons dead and seventy-nine in hospital through over-indulgence in alcohol.

It is generally agreed that the city's thousands of revellers consumed more liquor, and behaved in a more maudlin manner, than ever before.

Twenty cases of stabbing and four cases of shooting occurred in street brawls.

The number of arrests for drunkenness over the New Year in New York, says Reuter's Correspondent, has been exceptionally light, owing, it is believed, to the lenient attitude of the police out of consideration for the festive season; but the toll of poisoned liquor has been extremely heavy.

CZECH EMIGRANT'S FORTUNE.

INHERITS MILLIONS FROM AMERICAN HUSBAND.

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.
PORCHESTER, NEW YORK STATE, Thursday.

Fortune has smiled upon a middle-aged Czech maid servant, who, after marrying her employer, a wealthy New York stockbroker, has now inherited a vast fortune on his death. In the rambling gabled mansion, valued at £1,000,000, where for seventeen years she made the beds and polished the floors as chambermaid, and where her brother is still butler, this former Czech immigrant reigns to-day as mistress and sole owner.

Anna Maria Schleis was born on a small farm on Bohemia forty-seven years ago, and in 1927 she married, as his fourth wife, her employer, Mr. Frank W. Sabin, a millionaire. He died on Tuesday at the age of seventy-eight, leaving the bulk of his estate, valued at between £4,000,000 and £5,000,000, to his widow.

ROME'S ROYAL WEDDING.

WEEK'S REJOICING AND FESTIVITY.

PREPARATIONS ON A BIG SCALE.

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.
ROME, Thursday.

The Eternal City is all agog for next Wednesday's Royal wedding between the Italian Crown Prince and Princess Marie Jose of Belgium. The celebrations promise to be unique, both in scale and duration, and all classes of the populace will participate in the rejoicings.

The round of functions will extend throughout the week.

Elaborate arrangements have been made to decorate the streets in a manner worthy of the occasion. Opposite the Central Station, where the Royal personages will arrive, a huge triumphal arch has been erected, bearing on its supporting columns the Crown of Savoy and the Lion of Brabant. The Via Nazionale, along which the Royal procession will proceed, will be in gala dress, every window displaying the Italian and Belgian flags.

PARLIAMENT'S GIFTS.

Noteworthy among the magnificent presents which will be given to the Royal couple will be gifts from members of the Italian Parliament, which will be formally presented at a reception to be held at the Quirinal on Monday.

One of the most striking features of the celebrations will be a great firework display, which will take place on the Janiculum Hill on Thursday. It will last only some fifteen minutes, but it promises to be of unprecedented brilliance. Over eight thousand rockets will light up the sky, these being fired in such a way as to give the impression of a shining halo over the city.

Another spectacular effect will be produced by a "Star of Italy," thirty feet in diameter and lit with dazzling Bengal lights, which will illuminate the whole of the city.

AMNESTIES.

In addition to the partial remission of punishment which has been granted in a number of cases on the occasion of the Royal wedding, the King has decided to grant amnesties to soldiers who are undergoing punishment for offences against discipline.

The amnesty will benefit about 400,000 persons, and, as the result of the remission of one year from their sentences, nearly 6,000 persons who are at present in prison will be set at liberty.

WOMEN MOTORISTS.

PROPOSED SPEED TEST IN IRELAND.

An international speed test in Ireland for women motorists only, and another at Brooklands, are among the events in the new year's programme for women motorists being arranged by Mr. Ivor Halstead, founder of the Women's Automobile and Sports Association, yesterday.

Mr. Halstead said that a laurel wreath of silver leaves would be the main prize of the year, a sort of women motorists' blue riband, for the best performance of 1930. Two saloon motor cars were also to be given as prizes.

The first of the events, exclusively for women drivers, is to take place early in the year.

Another novel competition for women only would be a combined air, motor car and motor boat race.

Other interesting developments included a women's band, which would play at all the big motoring events for women.

EXPLOSION ON NAVAL LAUNCH.

U.S. AIRCRAFT CARRIER DAMAGED.

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.
SAN PEDRO, CALIFORNIA, Thursday.

Flames were seen shooting high above the superstructure of the United States Navy aircraft carrier Saratoga in Los Angeles harbour this evening. About six minutes after the first flames appeared the fire apparently subsided, but a cloud of smoke settled about the ship.

Considerable alarm was felt by the spectators on shore, as the Saratoga, which was completed at a cost of 35,000,000 dollars, and has been in service with the Battle Fleet for the past two years, carries 2,000 officers and men.

Later, however, it was learned that the damage to the aircraft carrier is only nominal. The actual explosion occurred on board a naval launch which was moored alongside the Saratoga. The head of the local fire fighting station made this report after dashing in a speed boat to the scene of the explosion.

Three men were seriously burned in the explosion.

STRANGE EPIDEMIC IN REFUGEE CAMP.

FORTY CHILDREN ALREADY DEAD.

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.
BERLIN, Thursday.

The strange infantile disease which has broken out among the children in the camp of Hammerstein, where the German fugitives from Russia are being sheltered, remains unchecked. Forty children have already died and fifty more are in a very precarious condition.

The disease, which follows upon measles, is accompanied by extremely high fever, and the first signs are inflammation of the corner of the eye and the skin of the cheek.

The quarantine over the camp has been prolonged, as several hundred children are also suffering from measles.

In the other Russian camp at Prenzeau there are also several children suffering from measles.

MURDER AND SUICIDE BY DYNAMITE.

SEQUEL TO NEW YEAR'S EVE QUARREL.

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.
REITZ, ORANGE FREE STATE, Thursday.

An extraordinary case of murder and suicide by dynamite occurred near here early on New Year's Day. Two Europeans named Markham and Van Zyl, who had been employed for some time on telephone construction, about eight miles outside Reitz, quarrelled on New Year's Eve.

Some time after midnight Van Zyl went to the tent where the explosives were stored, which was situated about 170 yards from the construction camp, and brought back a case containing fifty pounds of dynamite. He placed this under the bed on which Markham was sleeping and then exploded it, blowing both his victim and himself to pieces.

Parts of the bodies were found scattered for forty yards round, and the scene of the occurrence presented a terrible spectacle in daylight. Where the tent had stood was a hole fifteen yards in circumference and three feet deep. Pieces of the bedstead on which Markham was asleep were found sixty yards away, twisted and bent like wire.

ESSENTIALS OF A GENTLEMAN.

DEAN INGE AND GOOD MANNERS.

THE NATIONAL FAILING.

FLING AT THE "BEEFY FOXHUNTER."

Dean Inge gave his definition of the ideal gentleman in an address at the annual meeting of the Incorporated Association of Assistant Masters in Secondary Schools at Bristol yesterday afternoon.

He said that the ideal of an English gentleman had been for centuries the lay religion, the week-day religion of a great part of their nation, and it embodied those qualities which were most distinctive of their national character. Even a bishop would be much more angry if he were told he was no gentleman than if he were told he was no Christian.

The only unpardonable sin in England is to be a cad—that is to say, to fall short of the standard of honour to which all gentlemen have to conform. The ideal is so sacred to us that we do not like to talk about it or appeal to it. It seems almost indelicate to drag it out. If we lose this—and writers like Wells and Bernard Shaw are never tired of girding at it—we lose the sheet-anchor of our national character. We lose what for most Englishmen is the religion of their heart, whatever other colours they wear on their sleeves.

THE CULT OF OLD FAMILIES.

Discussing what were the essentials of a gentleman, the Dean asked was gentle birth one of them. The whole cult of old families was, perhaps, rather absurd. At any rate, it had decayed very rapidly in the last hundred years. Only a very few of our noble families had shown unusual ability for more than two generations. Wealth would not find many defenders, but fine manners were certainly an ingredient.

Vulgarity, not rusticity, was the opposite of good manners. To this day the Herald College would give no certificate of gentility to a tradesman. There was no sort of reason why a gentleman should not be a working farmer, or any other sort of working man. The moral qualities which belonged to the English ideal were truthfulness, courage, justice and fair play, abhorrence of meanness and crooked dealing, and respect for the personality of all human beings as such.

A VULGAR MISTAKE.

Contempt for the intellectual side of life is making the upper classes, as such, both useless under new conditions to the community and helpless to keep their own position. It is a vulgar mistake: it implies a want of sensibility to the higher and finer values of life. The beefy fox-hunter, who never opens a book, is a pathetic anachronism, only fit for a museum of fossils.

It is on this side that our upper classes' ideal needs most vigorous criticism. Anti-intellectualism is our chief national failing. There seems to be a notion in our minds that cleverness and knavery are near akin. The apparent stupidity of the Englishman is a useful camouflage, but it is not a thing to be proud of, and it has very nearly ruined us again and again.

MASS PRODUCTION IN EDUCATION.

Mr. H. L. Constable, the retiring chairman, in his report, said that they were at present faced in the educational world with the problem of mass production, and it was their business to see that the evils attendant on mass production in the industrial world were not repeated in the educational world.

Speaking of examinations, he said:—"The great defect of the school-leaving examination—in common with most examinations—is that it tests only a portion of the work done by the pupil at school, and it does not test the most important part—the general formation of character. To my mind the school-leaving certificate should be what it purports to be—a certificate which gives some indication as to how the pupil has passed through the five years or so of his secondary school life, and what he has done during them.

ANOTHER DEFECT.

"Another defect in the secondary school examination system is its connection with matriculation and entrance to the universities. It would be much better if matriculation were separated from the school-leaving examination altogether. Another knotty point was as to whether 15½ and 16, or thereabouts, is the right age to test the suitability of a pupil for admission to a university; whether it ought not to be made in a different way and at a different time; whether the second school examination, usually called the higher certificate, should not rather be the entrance examination to the university. It might, at any rate, remove the complaints often heard from the universities as to the immature and imperfectly trained product of the secondary schools.

"I admit I am not helpful in regard to this last result; for in every age the deficiencies of the rising generation have been, and will, doubtless, continue to be, a natural source of regret to all who view them."

GOVERNMENT GRANTS.

Mr. S. Mason (Newton Abbot) raised the question of Government grants in connection with the teaching profession when moving a resolution, which was carried, in regard to conditions of service.

The resolution called upon the Government to discourage the practice of making financial assistance to young persons conditional upon their promise to enter the profession.

BRIBES TO YOUTH.

These grants are a form of bribe, he said. There can hardly be a member of this meeting engaged in the profession who is not well aware that, time after time, a youth is induced to enter our profession for the sake of getting a cheap university career when he is so unsuited to it that, for the whole of his teaching career, he becomes a curse to his pupils and a misery to himself.

Incidentally, too, he very often becomes a menace to us as a profession. Surely teaching should be a vocation, not a vacation; and I am afraid that it is too often the case that a young man is induced to come into our profession by nothing better really than a mere bribe.

THE SOVIET AND PROPAGANDA.

COMMUNIST LETTER TO LONDON PAPER.

DOES IT INFRINGE THE NEW AGREEMENT?

FROM THE PRESS ASSOCIATION'S LOBBY CORRESPONDENT.
LONDON, Thursday.

A message from the headquarters of the Communist International which appears in the first issue of The Daily Worker, a new Communist newspaper published in London, is receiving official consideration. To-day the Foreign Office had no comment to make on the situation. Mr. Henderson, Foreign Secretary, is out of town; but it is known that the matter will receive his attention on his return.

In some British political quarters the message is regarded as a breach of the undertaking with regard to propaganda signed by the Russian Ambassador on behalf of the Soviet Government on December 20th.

It is from the Presidium of the Communist International, and it greets the new paper as "a new and powerful weapon in the hands of the British working classes in its fight against capitalism, against rationalisation, and the Socialist-Fascist-Labour Government."

The paper, according to the Communist International, is to be the rallying-point for the fight "against the Labour Government of rationalisation, anti-Soviet intrigues, Colonial brutalities, and preparations for another imperialist war."

THE PROPAGANDA PLEDGE.

Statements made in both Houses of Parliament have indicated that the British Government intends to interpret the propaganda pledge as covering the activities of the Communist International because of its relationship with the Soviet Government.

The propaganda pledge binds both the Russian and British Governments "scrupulously to respect the undoubted right of a State to order its own life within its own jurisdiction in its own way; to refrain and to restrain all persons and organisations under their direct or indirect control, including organisations in receipt of financial assistance from them, from any act, overt or covert, liable in any way whatever to endanger the tranquillity or prosperity of any part of the territory of the British Empire or the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, or intended to embitter the relations of the British Empire or the Union with their neighbours or any other countries."

Explaining the British Government's interpretation of this pledge in the House of Commons on November 5th last, Mr. Henderson, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, said that the British Government would insist that the promise given by the Soviet to refrain from propaganda and to restrain from such acts all persons and organisations under their direct or indirect control, "including organisations in receipt of any financial assistance from them, such as the Communist International, which is organically connected with the Soviet Government," should be carried out, both in the letter and in the spirit.

"After 1924," said Mr. Henderson, "it has been plainly stated to the Soviet representatives—and stated again twice by myself—that the Communist International will be regarded by His Majesty's Government as an organ of the Soviet Government."

A REPUDIATION.

Immediately after this declaration, Izvestia, the official newspaper of the Soviet Government, repudiated Mr. Henderson's interpretation of the propaganda clause, its argument being that the Soviet Government could not undertake any responsibility for the Communist International; but later—on December 4—Lord Thomson, speaking for the Government in the House of Lords, repeated Mr. Henderson's declaration that the British Government would regard the propaganda undertaking as including the Third International.

RUSSIAN EMBASSY'S ATTITUDE.

When a Press Association reporter called at the office of the Russian Ambassador to-night, in reference to the statement from the Presidium of the Communist International, a member of the Russian Ambassador's staff said that no official statement could be made. "We know," he said, "exactly the nature of the publication and the message it contains and the endeavour to link it up with the Soviet Government, and we may have something to say in a day or two. As to the charge made by an important British newspaper, that the Soviet Government has been responsible for a breach of the propaganda undertaking, that may also be dealt with. At the moment we have not anything to say."

THE PRINCE'S TOUR.

DEPARTURE TO-DAY.

The Prince of Wales will leave Southampton this afternoon in the Union Castle liner Kenilworth Castle for Cape Town, says The Times to-day. In attendance on him will be Brigadier-General G. F. Trotter, Major-General Sir John Ponsonby and Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Piers Legh. He will stay in Cape Town for a time as the guest of the Earl of Athlone, the Governor-General of South Africa, and the Countess of Athlone (Princess Alice). He will then travel north through Rhodesia to Dodoma, in Tanganyika territory, where he abandoned the previous expedition on receiving news of the grave condition of the King. The length of his stay in Africa will depend on the hunting and on the approach of the rainy season, but it is not expected that he will return to England before the end of April.

The Prince took leave of the King and Queen on Tuesday night at Sandringham after a day's hunting with the Quorn. He spent a busy day at York House yesterday, completing his plans and putting matters in order for his long absence.

Telegrams from our Correspondents in Dar-es-Salaam and Nairobi show that the Prince is not expected to reach Dodoma, where his cafari will await him, until February 20. It is thought that he may travel by air part of the way from the Union. The Prince is going to use British cars for transport purposes. Orders have been placed at Nairobi for three Wolseley Sedans and three Wolseley Tourers to meet the Prince at Dodoma. The baggage transport will consist of half-a-dozen Canadian Ford trucks.

so that for a year or two, at least, he may be saved the difficult task of seeking a career for himself.

FRIENDSHIP BETWEEN NATIONS.

Mr. G. R. Parker brought forward a resolution pressing upon the Board of Education and local education authorities the desirability of facilitating exchanges between secondary teachers in Great Britain and France, Germany and Austria.

He said that one of the great needs of humanity at the present time was an increase in the friendship and understanding among nations, and there could be no better way of getting to know the point of view and the national habits of thought of other nations than by going to live among them.

I think secondary school masters are particularly fitted to derive benefit from such visits and to learn the feelings and points of view of other nations, he said.

Mr. A. C. L. Hudson (Pontypridd), seconding, said that a schoolboy might consider that a foreign teacher was a queer fellow. That meant that he recognised that the teacher had a different point of view.

The resolution was carried, and the Conference adjourned until to-day.

LATE NEWS.

BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH "THE TIMES."

THE PACT AND THE COVENANT.

A MISUNDERSTANDING CORRECTED.

In a leading article The Times of to-day observes:—Mr. Stimson has found it necessary to correct a misunderstanding of the British Command Paper on the Optional Clause, which had apparently gained some currency in the United States, and in doing so he has emphasised—as did the recent French memorandum on the Naval Conference—the essential difference between the Briand-Kellogg Pact of Peace and the Covenant of the League of Nations. The paper to which he referred contained a memorandum explaining why the British Government had signed the clause accepting the obligation to refer certain classes of disputes with other nations to the Permanent Court of International Justice, and why, in the reservations which they made, they did not except from the jurisdiction of the Court disputes arising out of the exercise by the British Navy of its belligerent rights in time of war.

In the course of its argument the memorandum asserted that, if the obligations of the League Covenant and of the Pact of Peace are fulfilled, we cannot be involved in war in circumstances in which any member of the League could claim the rights of a neutral, that only members of the League who have also signed the Optional Clause could, under its terms, bring us before the Court, and that, therefore, no disputes arising out of our naval action could come before the Court. The argument is not, perhaps, absolutely conclusive; but in any case it applies, and was meant to apply, to members of the League only. This limitation was made quite clear in the memorandum. "As between members of the League," it sums up, "there can be no neutral rights, because there can be no neutrals." In some American versions and comments the limiting clause was apparently ignored, and the British Government were represented as committing themselves to the assertion that there could be no neutrals in any future war. It is easy to understand the effect that this misconception might produce among those many Americans who are sensitive to any suggestion that their country might become entangled in the disputes of other Powers. Obviously dreading this effect, Mr. Stimson was at pains, without delay, to point out the contrast between what the memorandum said and what it was supposed in the United States to have said.

NAVAL NEGOTIATIONS.

The difference of view as to what should be taken as the political basis of the naval negotiations constitutes one of the most interesting difficulties of the London Conference, adds The Times. It is not insuperable. It need not even prove very formidable, unless it is artificially made so. It would be a different matter if it were proposed to substitute the moral guarantee of the Pact for the legal guarantee of the Covenant, or even to make the signature of the Pact an excuse for holding up the development of a more complete system of legal guarantee under the Covenant. American opinion is opposed to participation by the United States in such a system as involving commitments and responsibilities of which it is impossible to measure the extent. But the Pact has not weakened the Covenant. It has reinforced it.

The two lines of approach to the disarmament problem—one from the Pact of Peace, the other from the Covenant of the League of Nations—converge towards the same objective, the increase of security and the reduction of armaments. With sincere co-operation and sympathetic understanding of each other's point of view, there is no reason why they should not unite; but it is essential that there should be both sympathy and sincerity on both sides.

LESSONS OF LAHORE.

A FOREGONE CONCLUSION.

In a despatch from Lahore yesterday, The Times Special Correspondent, surveying the events of the week, says:—It must now be recognised that the Congress never had the slightest intention of voting anything short of independence as the ultimate goal. Those who visualised reasoned debates on the advisability of accepting moderate counsels to empower the leaders to negotiate further, with a view to a round-table conference, were altogether over-optimistic. Apart from the tone of the opening session of the Congress, it is most significant that the long speeches of Mr. Gandhi and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, the Congress President, were not only prepared, but actually printed, some time before.

So far as Mr. Gandhi, Pandit Motilal Nehru, leader of the Congress Party in the Legislative Assembly, and Mr. Patel, President of the Legislative Assembly, are concerned, the visit to the Viceroy on December 23, therefore, took place after their minds had already been made up. The visit was probably designed, in the first place, in the faint hope of extracting concessions, and, in the second place, as a deliberate attempt to damage the Viceroy's dignity in the eyes of their followers. (It may be recalled that the Indian leaders themselves asked the Viceroy to receive them and hear their views.)

Those who saw the scenes of almost hysterical enthusiasm in the streets of Lahore or out at Lajpat Rai Nagar (the Congress camp) realise by now that if any moderate leader had had the courage to advocate taking part in the proposed round-table conference he would not have stood a ghost of a chance.

A DIFFERENT STORY.

When, however, it came to the Subjects' Committee, which is virtually an Executive Council, it was a very different story. It matters not that unanimity in rejecting the invitation to the proposed round-table conference was almost as emphatically expressed as in the Pandal across the way. Mr. Gandhi's decisive defeat on two important questions of procedure, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru's impotence to control the rival factions, the sharp challenge to Pandit Motilal Nehru's conduct of his high office—above all, the "walk-out" last night of more than sixty members, who followed Mr. Iyengar and Mr. Bose—all these have the deepest significance.

To take a rough parallel, Mr. Gandhi for the moment is in the position of a political leader who is capable of swaying the emotions and enthusiasms of a mass audience at a party meeting in the Albert Hall, but is incapable of maintaining either unity or even party discipline among its members in the House. It is in this split in the Executive of the Congress that hope of the peaceful administration of India and ultimate progress towards the legitimate claims of democracy lies.

LAHORE RESOLUTIONS

PAISLEY ... SEQUEL.

CINEMA MANAGER ARRESTED.

SERIOUS CHARGE.

FUNERAL OF TWO BROTHERS.

CHARLES DORWARD, manager of the Glen Cinema, Paisley, in which seventy children lost their lives in the panic on Tuesday, was arrested yesterday on a charge of culpable homicide.

The Relief Fund is steadily growing, and among the donations received yesterday was one of £1,000.

Two brothers were buried together yesterday. Other funerals will take place to-day. Services will be held in the Abbey and in the Roman Catholic churches.

ARREST OF THE MANAGER.

CULPABLE HOMICIDE CHARGE.

The arrest of Mr. Dorward followed a long period of investigation and inquiry conducted by the police on behalf of the Procurator-Fiscal. The arrest was made in Mr. Dorward's house, which is attached to the cinema. A large crowd gathered in the vicinity during the day, and watched the various officials entering and leaving the cinema. When Mr. Dorward stepped out, accompanied by police officers, very few people realised that he was in custody.

He will be brought up before the local Court to-day.

The cinema was yesterday visited by Mr. Dyer, Chief Officer of the London Fire Brigade, accompanied by two surveyors of the L.C.C., who deal with safety devices in cinemas.

Major T. H. Crozier, Chief Inspector of Explosives, arrived in Paisley yesterday morning, and, accompanied by police and fire officials, made an inspection, which lasted several hours, of the scene of the fire, and the passages and exits of the building.

BEHIND DRAWN BLINDS.

Paisley Town Council met during the day, behind drawn blinds, at the Municipal Buildings, to consider in detail plans for the funerals of the little victims.

Fourteen of the injured children have recovered sufficiently to return to their parents, and twenty-two now remain in the Royal Alexandra Infirmary. Of these two are stated to be in a serious condition.

There was a strange development yesterday in connection with the identification of the children. The development brought happiness to one family, but confirmed the worst fears of another. One of the dead had been identified as John McVey, aged four, of Hunter street, but when Mrs. McVey visited the infirmary later she was overjoyed to find her little boy among the patients in bed. The body, which had been wrongly identified, was that of Alexander Telford, aged four, of Lady lane. How the mistake was made is not yet known.

Yet another strange happening has come to light, and a Paisley mother's grief has been turned to joy. A little boy, George Grant, son of Mrs. G. Grant, of Foxbar Buildings, intended to go to the matinée when he was knocked down and injured in High street. He was taken in an unconscious condition to the infirmary, where his identity was for a long time unknown. When Mrs. Grant, hearing of the disaster, hurried to the infirmary, and, after a frantic search was unable to find her little son among the children, she was distracted.

The lad, who was in a separate ward, recovered consciousness on Wednesday, and asked to be taken home to his mother.

ONE FUNERAL IDEA ABANDONED.

The suggestion that there should be one public funeral and an interment in one common grave has been abandoned. A Memorial Service will be held in Paisley Abbey this morning. Mass will be celebrated in the Roman Catholic churches.

The relief fund is steadily growing, and among the donations received yesterday is one of £1,000 from Mr. Edward Cochran, a well-known business man in Paisley.

The following cablegram has been received from Sir Harry Lauder from Kansas City, U.S.A.:—"I mourn with you in your tragedy. Let these be days of stout hearts. Keep right on to the end of the road."

THE FIRST BURIALS.

The first burials of the seventy victims took place during yesterday afternoon, when the two boys, John and James Pinkerton, were buried together in a new grave on the side of a hill in Woodside Cemetery. Crowds stood in silence as the cortège, avoiding the main street of the town, passed from the boys' home to the cemetery. There was a pathetic scene at the house. Mothers whose children had escaped the disaster stood in the rain with tears running down their faces. With them stood little schoolfellows and playmates. Many of the children also were in tears. Among them was a little girl, Kathleen Pierce, who was a close friend of the dead boys, and was one of those who escaped from the cinema.

She saw the boys during the terrible struggle, and she related to a reporter how she saw the elder boy looking for his young brother. "I saw him go back among the crush, trying to find him," she said; "he, too, lost his life."

In addition to many wreaths from neighbours, there was one from the boys' school and many bunches of flowers from their playmates. No women attended the funeral.

The funeral was attended by the boys' headmaster and representatives of the Town Council and local churches.

INSTRUCTIONS TO CONGRESSMEN.

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.
LAHORE, Thursday.

It is understood that the new Congress Working Committee, at its first meeting today, decided to authorise the President to call upon all Congressmen in the various Legislatures to resign immediately.

It also fixed Sunday, January 26, as the day for a demonstration throughout the country in support of the new Congress creed, defined as Puran Swaraj.

It is further understood that the Committee considered that it was desirable to wait before giving definite shape to civil disobedience, and to see whether any future repressive action of the Government could be made the issue for civil disobedience on an individual or a mass scale.

THE NEW SLOGAN.

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.
CONGRESS CAMP, LAHORE, Thursday.

The official text of the resolution of the Working Committee of the Congress shows that the term Puran Swaraj is a Hindu translation of "complete independence," and is meant to convey to the general public the impression that the Congress policy hereafter will be to attain complete independence.

It is understood that the advocates of the new term contended in the Working Committee that the slogan Swaraj was worn out and must be reinforced by the term Purna, to convey the impression that the creed of the Congress had changed. In reality all that was sought was a new slogan, to attract attention before the holding of the country-wide demonstration, which has been planned for January 26th.

CALL FOR VOLUNTEERS.

Meanwhile the declaration of the Congress Working Committee will be read at meetings in various provincial languages, and the meetings will be invited to signify their assent to it.

The Committee also urges provincial organisations to enrol members and volunteers before February 10th.

The Committee has further appointed a Committee consisting of Dr. Kitchlew Syed, Mahmud and Dunichand to report on the allegation that the North-West frontier laws and regulations have caused embarrassment to innocent men, and to draw up suggestions for securing an early amendment or abrogation of any such laws.

MR. GANDHI CRITICISED.

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.
BOMBAY, Thursday.

"Heaven help Gandhi," said Mr. Jinnah, the prominent Muslim leader, in an interview to-day with Reuter's representative.

His view was that Mr. Gandhi and Pandit Motilal Nehru had taken upon themselves the greatest responsibility in breaking off pourparlers with the Viceroy, and then getting the All-India Congress to adopt resolutions calculated to do enormous harm to India.

"It seems to me," Mr. Jinnah said, "that Mr. Gandhi is mentally and constitutionally incapable of learning. His self-admitted Himalayan blunder in 1922 taught him nothing, and he does not realise the consequences which would follow a policy that is utterly unsuited to the modern conditions and realities which we have to face in India."

Owing to the disturbances arising out of the non-co-operation movement in 1922, Mr. Gandhi suspended the campaign, saying that he had committed "a Himalayan blunder."

HASTINGS CHESS TOURNAMENT.

CAPABLANCA STILL LEADING.

SPECIAL TELEGRAM.
HASTINGS, Thursday.

Capablanca retained his lead in the premier tourney by drawing to-day with Dr. Vidmar. The game followed familiar lines in the queen's pawn opening, and lasted only twenty moves.

Takacs had rather unusual misfortune in his seventh round game with Sergeant. The opening was novel and interesting, Sergeant defending a Retis opening in original and aggressive fashion, and Takacs, labouring over his replies, lost by time limit in the second hour, having made only thirty moves instead of the thirty-four required by the rules.

The great fighting game of the round was a Ruy Lopez between Maroczy and Yates, both of whom were very reluctant to concede the half-point. The struggle, mostly on the queen's side, went on to the fifty-sixth move, when Maroczy, with a slight apparent advantage in position, admitted that no win was possible. This was the Hungarian master's seventh draw in succession.

After seven rounds the scores stand :—

Capablanca, 5.
Yates, Sergeant and Dr. Vidmar, 4.
Sir G. Thomas, Winter and Maroczy, 3½.
Miss Menchik, 3.
Takacs, 2½.
Price, 2.

Yates and Sergeant, it may be noted, have yet to meet Capablanca.

The results in the seventh round of the premier reserves tournament now are as follow :—

Tylor beat Winter; Rejfir beat Vidmar, junior; Noteboom beat Flohr; Jackson beat Alexander. In an adjourned game Alexander beat Noteboom.

The leaders are :—

Tylor, 5½.
Kolanowski, 5.
Flohr and Rejfir, 4.

Illingsworth leads in major tournament "A" and Pursell in major tournament "B," neither having lost a game.

FOR CRIPPLE CHILDREN.

To-day a charity matinée in the Gaiety Theatre, Dublin, will be given to crippled and infirm children in city hospitals and homes. This annual delight is eagerly looked forward to by these poor little folk. During the early part of the day omnibuses, taxi-cabs and private cars will be commandeered to convey over 1,700 children from various institutions in the city.

A Reuter telegram from Hollywood states that it is reported that Miss Mary Miles Minter, the famous cinema actress, has entered a sanatorium to recover from a nervous breakdown.

THE DANGERS OF SECULARISM

ENGLISH TEACHERS' VIEWS.

DEFINITE RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION.

SPECIAL TELEGRAM.
MIDDLESBROUGH, Thursday.

The need for giving children definite religious instruction, the right of parents to select their children's schools, and a demand for fair financial treatment for Roman Catholic schools, were among the points urged at the eighteenth annual conference of the Catholic Teachers' Federation at Middlesbrough to-day.

In his presidential address, Mr. W. Moulding said that the time had arrived when they must ask the Government for fair financial treatment for Catholic schools. The Catholic body was asked to find a million pounds to rebuild or alter its black-listed schools, while the re-organisation suggested in the Hadow report would cost three millions. In justice Catholic schools were entitled to financial treatment at least equal to the schools provided by the local authorities.

PARENTS' RIGHTS.

The parents, not the State, had the right to educate their children, and, therefore, the right to select the schools. In the last thirty years voluntary schools had decreased by almost three thousand, Catholic schools alone showing a small increase. Was this decrease because parents to-day were becoming opposed to the teaching of definite religious doctrine?

He believed that many parents still longed for it, but to obtain it the price was too high.

"As teachers, we know that the children of to-day are more in need of definite religious teaching than the children of a generation ago. In this age of religious indifference there are many agencies insidiously working for the destruction of our little ones. Divorce religion from education, remove its restraining influence, and the very foundation on which society rests will soon be shattered."

THE ELEMENTARY SCHOOL.

Dr. Shine (Catholic Mission of Middlesbrough) said that if definite Christian religion was to survive in this country, it would be only through the elementary schools. Every blow against definite religious teaching in the schools was a blow against the religion of the country. Some parents desired definite religious teaching for their children, others were content with the indefinite religion of the Council schools.

The two classes of schools were equal partners in the national system. What was done for one should be done for the other. The only alternative was secularism, pure and simple, which would mean undermining the whole edifice of true education.

A HINT TO THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. T Quirk (Liverpool) said that if the Government had the wisdom and statesmanship to settle this question, they would deserve another twenty years of power, but if they used the economic weapon to down a minority, they could not look forward to any long term of office.

Speaking of the need for a Roman Catholic test for teachers in Roman Catholic schools, Mr. Quirk remarked: "Most of the failures in life are because people are experts in the jobs for which they are not paid." (Laughter.)

THE TRANSFER OF PUPILS.

Among the resolutions passed was one opposing the suggested transference of all pupils over eleven to a different school, and expressing the opinion that, with improved staffing and equipment, senior classes could be successfully organised in the majority of existing schools.

LIFE AND LAUGHTER IN AFRICA.

CUSTOMS ON THE EAST COAST.

The annual series of lectures for juveniles was continued yesterday afternoon in the Concert Hall, Royal Dublin Society, Ballsbridge, when Mr. Granville Squiers, F.R.G.S., told a delightfully interesting story of African life and laughter to a large gathering of children. He dealt with the natives on the East coast of that country, whom he described as very backward, and said that it would take a very long time to make any improvement in them.

On the coast line of the country the natives extracted oil out of the cocoa nut, and they did just enough work to keep them in food. Inland, where the climate was very hot and dry, grain-growing and raising sheep and cattle were carried on, and the people there grew only sufficient grain for the year, never making the least provision for the future. The result was that when drought came, as it often does, they lived on roots.

It was useless to try and get them to look ahead; for their mentality was altogether different from that of the European. The customs of the country, the habits of the people, and the wonderfully productive climate were described in a very interesting way, and Mr. Squiers, with the aid of a fine collection of photographs which were exhibited on the screen, gave a realistic impression to the audience of how the natives of East Africa passed their daily lives. Some of these natives still lived in caves and used stone implements.

AN EXAGGERATED BELIEF.

Referring to the generally accepted belief that news travelled very swiftly in Africa, he said that he did not agree that it travelled as fast as was stated in many books written on Africa. On the East coast of Africa, at all events, news did not travel unusually fast, but the natives were able to convey messages for several hundred yards by a kind of yodelling shout. He had tried to do the same, but try as he would his voice failed to carry far.

The white man, the settler, he said, was required in such countries as Africa, because he was the only incentive to get the natives to work their country's wealth.

THE EVENING LECTURE.

A very large audience assembled last night to hear Mr. Granville Squiers lecture again on his African wanderings. He has spent twelve years as settler, soldier, hunter and trader in Kenya and the Tanganyika territory, during which he secured a great number of striking photographs. These, mounted and skilfully coloured as lantern slides, drew repeated rounds of applause when exhibited on the screen last night.

Mr. Squiers spoke of native women who tried to borrow his leather punch to perforate the lobes of their children's ears. They thought this punch would be more effective than the pointed stick they themselves used for the purpose. He also spoke of German sanitary officials before the war, who inspected the villages accompanied by native police, who thrashed offenders forthwith.

Mr. Squiers interspersed his lecture with very lifelike imitations of native yells and dances and animal noises, and spoke of native recruits during the war, who had so enlarged the lobes of their ears that they buttoned them together with a cotton reel behind their heads!

There were photographs and stories of adventures with lions and herds of elephant, of native costumes and customs. The lecturer had an infectiously unconventional manner of delivering his lecture, and his frequent dry sallies provoked prolonged roars of laughter.

U.S.A. AND KELLOGG PACT.

VIEWS OF "REPUBLICAN ISOLATIONISTS."

FROM "THE TIMES" CORRESPONDENT.
WASHINGTON, Thursday.

The recent British White Paper on the optional clause and the interpretation of its meaning, which was made public by Mr. Stimson, the Secretary of State a few days ago, have been made the subject of discussion by the report that certain unnamed "Republican Isolationists" accept Mr. Stimson's statement as a "backdown from the Hoover-Macdonald joint decision to accept the Kellogg Peace Pact positively in its moral, if not legal, obligations."

Mr. Stimson was questioned on the subject this morning, and particularly on the suggestion that some understanding had been reached by President Hoover and Mr. Macdonald, "on which Great Britain could base the statement that there would be no neutrals in the next war."

To this Mr. Stimson replied categorically that nothing of the sort had been discussed by Mr. Hoover and Mr. Macdonald, and that no commitment had been made. He added that he had not conferred with the British Ambassador or any other Briton before issuing his statement, which was his own interpretation of the White Paper, made upon his own initiative and authority.

Either sincerely or disingenuously, however, the "Republican Isolationists" profess to believe that some such understanding has been reached by Mr. Hoover and Mr. Macdonald, and that the administration has now been forced to beat a retreat.

Mr. Stimson's statement, they say, serves notice that the British position, in so far as it rests upon the Kellogg Pact, is no longer accepted by the United States Government; that by extension, the United States will not again attempt to invoke world opinion against nations which threaten to break it; and that, in consequence, the great Treaty is mere gesture, unacceptable either as a major premise of the London Naval Conference as predicate of sea law or as the broad foundation for the whole Hoover foreign policy.

THE POSITION OF THE BATTLESHIP.

BEST FOR "THROWING ABOUT HIGH EXPLOSIVES."

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.
BOSTON, Thursday.

The uses of the battleship were described in vivid language to-day by Mr. Adams, Secretary of the Navy, in a speech which he delivered before the Chamber of Commerce, and which, in view of the forthcoming Naval Conference, was of particular interest.

The battleship, he said, was still a very important and probably the leading weapon of the Navy. He expressed the opinion that the battleship was still by far the most economical way of throwing about high explosives. In one minute the guns of a fleet could inflict as much damage on an opposing fleet as could a large force of aircraft, with an important difference—a ship could remain on the scene of battle, while it was necessary for aircraft to return to the aircraft carrier or base.

Referring to naval parity, Mr. Adams declared that the American Navy wanted peace as much as anybody, and would welcome the means by which competition in shipbuilding might be stemmed. "Our officers," he said, "are not pugilistic swashbucklers looking for war."

MAIL BAG ROBBERY.

£1,000 STOLEN FROM SORTING OFFICE.

A mail bag containing £1,000 was stolen from a temporary sorting office at Cardiff during Christmas. The bag, it was learned yesterday, was consigned from the Caerphilly branch of the Midland Bank, and arrived at the Drill Hall at Cardiff, which was being used as a temporary post office. That was the last seen of it. The £1,000 was in notes.

The police were informed of its disappearance, and in conjunction with the Post Office have been making exhaustive inquiries. The Postmaster at Cardiff yesterday would neither deny nor confirm the statement that the mail bag was missing.

A Midland Bank official said to a Press Association reporter last night:—"A package containing money is certainly missing, but the matter is in the hands of the Post Office. We understand that a package consigned from our Caerphilly branch by registered mail reached Cardiff and then disappeared on Christmas Eve."

At the General Post Office, London, it was stated:—"One bag is missing from the Drill Hall, Dumfries place, Cardiff, which we had to use as a temporary post office during the Christmas rush. We employ a large number of temporary clerks in the sorting office, and enquiries have been set on foot to check the movements of the mail bag. So far, however, that the bag containing among other packages one from the Midland Bank valued at £1,000, arrived at Cardiff, we are without information. We cannot say that anyone is held suspect in connection with the missing bag, which seems to have been definitely stolen."

WEDDING RING ON TELEPHONE.

U.S. LONG-DISTANCE CEREMONY.

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.
WACO, TEXAS (By Mail.)

Mr. and Mrs. Homer Eakin were married on December 23rd over long-distance telephone, Eakin being in Cleveland, and the bride, Miss Bethel Pharr, in Waco. Justice Audrey Morris, of Waco, performed the ceremony, while witnesses listened over extension telephones.

The pair are still on "honeymoon," though they have not seen each other for two months. The ceremony took six minutes, and the 'phone bill was nine and a half dollars (nearly £2)—considerably cheaper," said the bride, "than the railroad fare from Cleveland to Waco."

Eakin's witness was requested to sign an affidavit and mail it to Waco. A health certificate required by Texas Laws was wired to Justice Morris by Eakin.

A CHILDHOOD ROMANCE.

The marriage is the culmination of a romance that started at a Christmas dinner in Chilton, Texas, fourteen years ago, when the bride was six years old and the groom eight. The bride's mother, listening on one of the Waco extension 'phones, started issuing orders to her son-in-law immediately after the ceremony, while the bride, on another instrument, cried: "Aw, mother, hush and hang up."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

LIFFEY BRIDGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—For sheer ineptitude and inaccuracy it would be difficult to excel some of the statements made by speakers who discussed the transporter bridge question at yesterday's meeting of the Rathmines Urban District Council. One speaker, for instance, is reported as having said that "the Bridge Bill had been rushed through both Houses of the Oireachtas." Let us see what the facts were. When the original Port and Docks Port Bill to authorise the reconstruction of Butt Bridge came before the Dail, President Cosgrave declared his personal view that Butt Bridge should be substituted by a bridge on the eastern side of the Custom House, and took the very unusual course of moving that the whole bridge problem should be referred to a Special Committee of the Dail. That Committee, under the chairmanship of Professor Thrift, invited evidence from the various local authorities concerned. No record of response to that invitation to Rathmines Council is available; nor does it appear that the City Commissioners, or any of the other local authorities concerned, took any part in the proceedings. In the absence of such evidence, or of expert town-planning advice of any kind, the Special Committee entered into a compromise with the Port and Docks Board, under which the rebuilding of Butt Bridge was approved—at a cost of about £100,000—upon the condition that a further £300,000 should be spent upon an absurd transporter contrivance.

After the lapse of many months the dual project, as so amended, came formally before a Joint Private Bill Committee of the Oireachtas and—again in the absence of Rathmines and other local authorities—received formal approval. So far as I am aware, the only local body which appeared in opposition to the scheme was the County Council of Dublin, and their opposition was merely to certain clauses which dealt with the area upon which the cost of the project should fall. This relatively unimportant detail having been settled, the bill passed, without further protest or discussion, through the Committee, and subsequently through the Dail and the Senate.

Even at these stages it would appear that members of both Houses, who might have been assumed to represent the ratepayers of Dublin, Rathmines and the other districts concerned, failed to mention the fact that the traffic census upon which the Joint Committee approved the scheme was several years out of date, and that the traffic congestion on both O'Connell Bridge and Butt Bridge had practically doubled during the interval. Such is the real history of a project to the inevitable outcome of which Rathmines Council and the Dublin Mercantile Association have at last awakened, and upon which the City Commissioners, the Dublin Chamber of Commerce, and other statutory and voluntary bodies concerned still appear to remain indifferent.

After all, perhaps the belated action of Rathmines Council means that there is yet a spark of hope—even at the eleventh hour and fifty-ninth minute—that the whole scheme may be re-examined before any final and fatal step is taken. It is now clear to every student of the problem that the rebuilding and widening of Butt Bridge can only serve to bring about more intense congestion than that which now prevails in the College Green area. Even if Tara street be widened—an extremely costly operation not included in the £300,000 cost of scheme as passed by the Oireachtas—the result, at best, can merely be a still more acute traffic problem in Pearse street, which, during the last few years, has become one of the most dangerously congested streets in the city. On the other hand, the bridge upon the eastern side of the Customs House—so definitely favoured by President Cosgrave—would permit of the construction, at a relatively small outlay, of a wide highway to connect Amiens street with the Westland row and Mount street areas, and so would permit of the diversion of a large amount of north-and-south traffic from the College Green bottle-neck. This particular solution of the problem has been favoured by all parties concerned except the Port and Docks Board, who, regarding Dublin as being merely the annexe to a harbour, take the view that every other aspect of civic necessity and convenience should be sacrificed to the retention of three or four hundred feet of quaysides.

So much convincing evidence has been produced since the bill became law, as to the uselessness and absurdity of the transporter bridge section of the project, that its further discussion would seem to be unnecessary. Even if the transporter expedient was ever intended to be any more than as an effort to throw dust in the eyes of the public—in order to defeat the scheme for the bridge on the eastern side of the Customs House, and to secure authority for the rebuilding of Butt Bridge—those who at any time believed in the transporter idea have by now probably made up their minds that it is impracticable.

In these circumstances, though preliminary works for the widening of Butt Bridge have already begun, is it not possible, without further delay, to re-open the whole of the vital issues involved, and to find a means to consider whether it would not be better to proceed at once with (a) the construction of the bridge on the eastern side of the Customs House, and (b) the substitution of a vehicular structure for the present Metal Bridge, as an alternative to the Butt Bridge plus transporter bridge scheme? These two bridges, with their necessary street connections, would certainly cost much less than £300,000, and would achieve the vitally important result of providing relief to the growing congestion which even now makes vehicular progress almost impossible in the O'Connell Bridge—Westmoreland street and College Green areas.

To defer amending action until Senator Johnson's, or some other, Town-Planning bill may become law would simply be to allow the whole issue to be prejudged. A great and vital emergency has, in fact, arisen. Is it to be allowed to go by default?—Yours, etc.,

"PATHFINDER."

SIR HERBERT CECIL STRONGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—Let Dublin City and Dublin University take some credit for the Knighthood conferred on the Chief Justice of the Leeward Islands. In the nineties of last century quite a large number of undergraduates of Trinity College lodged in the neighbourhood of the South Circular road, under no supervision except that of the old D.M.P. Many of us were Ulstermen, and we naturally congregated in one another's lodgings. The men I knew best lived under hard conditions, worked hard, played games, and wrangled together about everything in heaven and earth, and most of them made good in after life, thanks to the urbanity of the South Circular road and the atmosphere of Dublin University.

Stronge was one of us. Your notice of his Knighthood refers to his marriage. We knew him in the interval between the schoolboy age and the lover age. He possessed the energy and slog of the Ulsterman—qualities that enable a man to get there. I remember him studying the College Calendar to see what money prizes he could earn to help him to buy books, and making me the offer to read an English literature honour examination course together, each of us to read one half of the course and coach the other in the half we did not read; and by our co-operative spirit we secured second class honours and a few pounds worth of books. When I now pass along Camden row I think of Stronge's method of coaching. We walked down different sides of this narrow street and shouted questions and answers across the street at one another. The effort to hear and answer, Stronge said, drove the information home. I only remember one occasion when he acknowledged himself worsted in debate, and that was when he first encountered the present Recorder of Belfast in the College Historical Society. He returned from the fray congratulating himself that he had only been worsted by another Ulsterman.

I find it difficult to picture the lean and lanky undergraduate of thirty odd years ago as now:

the Justice,
In fair round belly, with good capon lined,
With eyes severe and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances.

But, as one who has spent more of his life on the South Circular road than in any other locality, may I send the worthy Knight congratulations from this old, rambling road, which still waits for the interpreter of its queer, mixed, Dublin, human life?—Yours, etc.,

HUGH W. B. THOMPSON.

THE ULSTER PIG.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—In your issue of December 13th last many of us were astonished to read the evidence of Mr. P. J. Quaide, of Limerick, given before the Grain Tribunal in Dublin. I may state, first of all, that I am in entire agreement with his remarks about feeding; but why, after giving that entirely germane evidence, he had to embark on the vexed question of comparison of different breeds of pigs, which seems to have little or nothing to do with their feeding, passes the ordinary reader's comprehension. What have the various breeds of pig to do with the Grain Tribunal? However, whether his evidence was entirely off the point, or not, matters little. The fact remains that Mr. Quaide made certain statements greatly to the disadvantage of the large white Ulster pig, and, of course, to that of its breeders.

There are three counties in the Free State where the large white Ulster is practically the only variety bred or fed by farmers—Donegal, Cavan and Monaghan. Most of these animals are, no doubt, cured as "rolled bacon"; but it is obvious that the curers are not only concerned with the bacon, and, even if Mr. Quaide believes that "the bacon of the worst pig can be rolled," what about the hams, etc.? I have been engaged for the last ten years in breeding pedigree large white Ulsters, and have always kept most careful records. From these records it would be very easy to prove the outstanding characteristics of this breed—fertility and early maturity. It is on account of these features, as well as their extreme docility and adherence to type, that this breed is so much favoured by farmers who know it. For the sake of brevity, however, I shall only mention, as an example, that one sow, which first farrowed in March, 1925, has up to date reared to maturity seventy-four pigs in eight litters.

We have never to any extent engaged in feeding for pork, but, owing to the numerous statements one heard and read—made chiefly by people interested in other breeds—to the effect that the large white Ulster was "not suitable for any but rolled bacon," "too fat," "not a good bacon-pig" or "any good for the small-pork market," I decided in 1928 to test the matter by entering a pair of pedigree large white Ulsters in one of the bacon classes at the London Dairy Show. For this prrpose several hogs and gilts were fed and sent to Messrs. Harris, Calne, Wiltshire, where they were inspected, marked, killed and cured as "Wiltshire" bacon and ham, at about six months old, and then sent to the Dairy Show for judging as bacon. It may be mentioned that the pair originally selected put on too much weight in the time, and we were, therefore, obliged to send a younger pair, and, in my opinion, not so good. Also, an expert feeder would naturally have an advantage.

However, the result was that the bacon from the two pigs sent for competition took fifth place for the "Beale" Cup. Although they were not, of course, awarded any of the four prizes, and were nine points behind the cup winners, it is to be observed that the bacon gained several points more than the winning bacon entered for another cup. To anyone conversant with the type and quality of exhibits entered for the bacon classes of the London Dairy Show it will appear obvious that a seed of pig which can produce bacon capable of taking even fifth place in one of these classes can scarcely be described as "the worst pig in the world" by any fair-minded person.—Yours, etc.,

IRELAND AND UR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—In his interesting letter Mr. W. A Jones mentions the existence of the traditional grave of Cassair, near Boyle. This is recorded by all the annalists, and Geraldus Cambrensis refers to it as being well known in his time. Mr. Jones is, however, incorrect in saying that it is "the only thing of its kind in Ireland." Besides this grave of Ceasair and the cairn of her companion, Bith, on Slieve Beagh, which I mentioned in my article, it is recorded that another of her company, Ladhra by name, died and was buried at Ard-Ladhrann. His gave is identified by Dr. O'Donovan with a mound at Ardamine, on the east coast of Wexford. Three burial mounds, therefore, still exist that are believed to be antediluvian.

The annals tell that Fintain, the third man of the party, was buried at Feart-Fintain, but his grave has not been identified, and tradition declares that he outlived the Deluge. In legend he is, indeed, the Methuselah of Ireland, and there are tales of his survival until the reign of Dermot, High King in the sixth century A.D.—Yours, etc.,

THE NATIONAL WAR MEMORIAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—In the interests of the ex-Service men, the subscribers to the War Memorial Fund and the trustees, I have been asked to summon a meeting to deal with the present situation. I will be glad, before arranging speakers at the meeting, to hear from any, North or South, who would care to be present.—Yours, etc.,

Hon. President, British Legion.

JURISDICTION IN COUNTY COURTS.

At a meeting of Waterford Corporation yesterday evening the following resolution was unanimously passed :—"We emphatically protest against any curtailment of the jurisdiction conferred on the County Courts by the Courts of Justice Act. Any interference with such jurisdiction would, in our opinion, tend to further centralisation in Dublin, with increased cost to the public. We further recommend that civic appeals from County Court judges' decisions should be heard locally before a High Court judge, who should hold sittings every six months for this purpose in assize towns. The present system of appeal is unsatisfactory and costly to the public."

Councillor Forrest said that interference with the present jurisdiction would take justice far away from them, and would prejudice country practitioners. They were all out for local industry, and they ought to look after the lawyers as well as everybody else. The matter of appeals was very serious. There was a certain remoteness about them which did not recommend itself. Going to Dublin on shorthand notes appeals was like appearing before the Privy Council.

The Mayor (Councillor Walsh) said that it was conceded for years and years that when they got the management of their own affairs judicial procedure and system would be improved and made more economical, but that had not worked out as well as intended.

General Weygand has been appointed Chief of the General Staff of the French Army, in succession to General Debeny, who has retired at his own request, while maintaining his membership of the Supreme War Council.—Reuter.

CHRISTIAN DEAD.

FOUND SHOT IN HIS STUDY.

Brigadier-General Gerard Christian was found shot in the study of his house in Belgravia, London, last night. At about seven o'clock the report of a firearm was heard, and on going to the study members of the household found Brigadier-General Christian lying on the floor. He was bleeding from a bullet wound in the head, and near to him lay a small revolver. He had been in bad health of late. Shortly before Christmas he took to his bed, but he was said to have improved considerably within the past few days.

Mrs. Christian is ill, and has not yet been told of her husband's death.

BRADFORD SHOP MURDER.

MAN CHARGED.

The Bradford police officially announced early this morning that William Warne (44), describing himself as a greengrocer, of New row, Baildon Green, Shipley, near Bradford was charged with the murder early yesterday. He was arrested by Detective Superintendent Petty, Detective Inspectors Mitchell and Easton, and Sergeant Taylor, of the Bradford C.I.D. He was taken to Bradford Police Station and formally charged with the murder of Mrs. Edith Warne in the shop in Wakefield road, Bradford, about 10 p.m. on December 30 and 8.40 on the 31st.

U.S. MARKETS.

SHORT-LIVED GAINS.

REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.
NEW YORK, Thursday.

Stocks opened strong, and the new year was greeted with a brisk rally, with gains ranging from 1 to 6 points, which, however, were short-lived, as a renewal of pressure against Marshandise issues, Utilities and high-priced specialities turned the course of prices downward around mid-day. Optimistic year-end statements by Secretaries Mellon and Lamont and a number of banking, business and railroad executives were not received with the same enthusiasm as in previous years. Apart from the rather general belief that the security of prices will probably be better in the last half than during the first half of the year, few brokerage houses ventured prophesies as regards the trend of the market during the next few months. The decline was more marked during the afternoon in sympathy with the sharp drop in United States Steel. Allied Chemical, Sears Roebuck and Standard Gas declined 6 to 8 points, and Air Reduction Brake, American Can, American and Foreign Power, American Power and Light, American Waterworks, Anaconda Copper, Bethlehem Steel, A. M. Byers, Case Threshing Machine, Chesapeake and Ohio, Detroit, Edison Fox Film, Johns Manville, Macy Co., Missouri Kansas, Republic Iron and Steel, Simmons Co., U.S. Steel and Westinghouse Electric 3 to 5 points. GOSSIP FROM THE COURSE

OUTSIDER WINS VICTORY HURDLE.

SYRIAN'S SURPRISE.

GOOD PERFORMANCE OF STRANATHRO.

(FROM OUR TRAVELLING CORRESPONDENT.)

MANCHESTER, Thursday Night.

The weather was ever so much better when racing began here this afternoon, and the light was as well-nigh perfect as could be obtained; in fact, it never failed during the three hours of racing. The sport was, perhaps, not quite so interesting as it had been yesterday afternoon. An outsider in Syrian, whom Peacock trains for Mr. Lionel Dugdale, turned up in the Victory Hurdle, and, being favoured with a light weight, he won by ten lengths from the favourite, Promptitude. The latter started at a fractionally shorter price than Duke of Florence, who settled down last and never improved much, although he did manage to finish fourth. It was the soft going which beat Duke of Florence, who had never been able to act in such conditions as we had this afternoon.

Don Sancho, who once won the Irish Grand National, was probably a very lucky winner of the Manchester Handicap Steeplechase; for he made a mistake at the last fence which nearly brought him down. However, he recovered and went on to win by fifteen lengths from Ashcrop.

Stranathro, whom Mrs. Webster bought out of Mr. Persse's stable at the December sales, accomplished a very good performance to win the Broughton Hurdle; for he had been unlucky in running, and Winter Royal had a good lead of him at the last obstacle. His better speed, however, prevailed on the flat, and he won by a head. It is highly probable that the next time Stranathro runs, even if it is in the best company, he will win far more easily than he did to-day.

It is stated that there is no flood water on the course at Gatwick, and that racing is certain there to-morrow. One of the National horses, MASTER BILLIE, is likely to run there for the Stayers' Handicap Steeplechase, and he should win.

The Four-Year-Old Handicap Hurdle may be won by ZINITA, and the Moderate Handicap Hurdle by THE BROWN TALISMAN.

At Haydock Park I like the chance of KINGSDOWN in the Amateur Riders' Handicap Hurdle, and of THE MONK in the Ashton Steeplechase.

THE RACE.

Water Toi and Zig Zag, in close company, forced the pace in front of Syrian, Gonedry and Promptitude, with Clear Cash heading the remainder, of whom Duke of Florence brought up the rear. After going half a mile Promptitude moved into fourth place, just ahead of Gonedry, Windermere Laddie and Clear Cash, and soon afterwards Make and Break and White Orb came to the front, pursued by Promptitude, and in this order they entered the straight first of Clear Cash, Gonedry and Zig Zag, with Duke of Florence still last. Two hurdles from the finish Syrian held a slight lead of Promptitude and Clear Cash, and, drawing away on the flat, Syrian won by ten lengths; same distance between second and third. Duke of Florence was fourth, Cardinal's Ring fifth, Windermere Laddie sixth, Zig Zag seventh, Gonedry eighth and Water Toi last.

GRUNDY'S Kilbuck cantered six furlongs.

HARTIGAN'S Sanders, Royal Ace, Duke of Athlone and the rest of the team were usefully employed.

ROGERS'S Deep Water and Hug went a like distance.

SLOCOCK'S Brighter Bird traversed a mile and a quarter at half speed.

WELLESLEY'S Silver Ore and Gaston covered a mile and a half steadily.

GATWICK TO-DAY :

PROBABLE STARTERS AND BETTING.

A CHANCE FOR UNCLE BEN.

SELECTIONS.

Two race meetings—at Gatwick and Haydock Park—monopolise attention this week-end. At the Southern fixture the Stayers' Handicap steeplechase over four miles is the feature of the first day's card. Master Billie should be all the better for his recent race behind Sutton Wick and Toy Bell at Nottingham, and he is such a proved stayer that he can be expected to show better form over the extra mile here. Ruddyman finished last in a three miles steeplechase on this course a month ago, and, perhaps, is not yet at his best, but on that running he has a 9lb. pull with Ballyhanwood, and may, therefore, be a dangerous proposition here. Irina has not shown winning form for a long time, but Uncle Ben won over this course and distance last February, and on that form is easily the pick of this handicap. In that race he gave 10lb. and 6lb. respectively to Ballyhanwood and Ruddyman, who were both unplaced, and, as the 5lb. allowance will probably be taken for Uncle Ben by T. McCarthy, I select him to win.

For the Four-Year-Old Handicap I take sides with Laminaria, who came up against something above the ordinary when second to Rio de Saba at Sandown Park. There will probably be considerable danger from Fikbuster, who will represent W. Payne, but Laminaria claims preference.

The best of the Hookwood Novices' Steeplechase should be Wood Owl, who accounted for all except Footer at Kempton Park in November.

The following are the times of the first three riders:—Sarkie (Rudge-Whitworth), 2 hrs. 41 mins. 45 secs.; Len Cohen (A.J.S.), 2 hrs. 50 mins. 39 secs.; J. M. Clarge (Velocette), 2 hrs. 52 mins. 59 secs.

HAYDOCK PARK—TO-DAY :

PROBABLE STARTERS AND BETTING.

SELECTIONS.

The Gerard Handicap Steeplechase is the centrepiece of the Haydock Park programme to-day, and I think that General Advance is entitled to sound support, in the possible absence of Creebrae. General Advance has won his last two races very easily, and, now that he is at the peak of his form, he should not have much difficulty in winning here.

The Ashton Steeplechase is assigned to The Monk, who should be an easy winner in this class; and in the presumed absence of the best of the entry in the Warrington Handicap Hurdle, I take sides with Privit's Pride, who failed on this course in November, but is entitled to a step up on that form on this occasion.

HUNTING.

WARD UNION HOUNDS.

A large field was out at Dunboyne on Tuesday, when the Ward finished the old year well, and caught one of their most elusive outliers. This stag was found in the covert at Wearingstown, and gave a great hunt via Newtown Bridge and Cushenstown, almost into Dunboyne village. Getting clear away by Court Hill and Dunboyne Park, the chase went on by Roosks and Hamwood into the Knockheather bog, and bore left-handed for Confey. A large portion of the field were thrown out here, while the remainder stuck to the park as they ran by Knockmulcooney into Sion, and entered the Rye Water valley at Kellystown. Here the stag took to the floods, and was captured in the river by Kildare Bridge by a well-directed lasso thrown by Mr. Geoffrey Gilpin, who is expert in the art. The hunt covered a lot of ground, and occupied one hour and thirty minutes.

BALLYMACAD HOUNDS.

Meeting at Crossdrum on last Saturday; hounds found in the bottoms near Oldcastle. They hunted their fox up by Crossdrum into Baltrasna, where he wheeled left-handed across the Castlepollard road, pointing for Castle of Moylough; then on through Milltown, into Loughcrew, at the rustic lodge, where hounds were stopped. A fox found along Baltrasna road got to ground behind the house, and another from Mr. Kilroy's, after being repeatedly headed, was also marked after going a short distance. Mr. Hone's gorse supplied the next fox, which ran towards Mr. Kilroy's, then wheeled, and went on through Killeagh Church. Pointing for Castlecor he swung right-handed up by the new covert to Crossdrum gate, and ran hounds out of scent near the house.

December 31st, Ballyfore. Drew Milgrew blank, but a fox found in Newtown ran very fast across Clonmellon road, through Fordstown and Hemlinstown, to Clonabraney. Not dwelling an instant he broke on the Crossakiel side, but wheeled left-handed for Belview. He then went across Phillipstown and Thomastown, by Mr. O'Reilly's, of Williamstown, into Loughcrew. Hounds pushed their fox through the demesne to Loughcrew Church, where a fresh fox got up, and hounds were stopped, after a good hunt of one hour and ten minutes.

FINANCIAL NEWS AND NOTES

TONE AND COMMENT.

DUBLIN UNDECIDED.

GUINNESS SUPPORTED.

There was a little more general dealing on 'Change when markets opened after the usual New Year holiday, but this was to some extent due to adjustments in connection with the fortnightly settlement. Weaker prices were quoted for National Loans, War Loan 5 per cent. Stock, and particularly Indis 3½ per cent. Stock, but Land Guaranteed 2½ per cent. Stocks were marked higher. Dublin Corporation Stock remain steady to firm. Rather easier prices were occasionally shown for Banking Securities. Solid support was supplied all day for Guinness Ord. Shares, and the price closed nearly 1s. a share to the good. British and Irish Steam. Pref. were disposed to recover from recent dulness. Cables Prefs. closed higher. The whole Railway market was more disposed to harden and improve than stand still, even among Ordinary Stocks. Parent Trusts were a little irregular, with the Deferred harder. Arnott Prefs. were bought 1s. 6d. a share under last marking. Textiles were quiet and scarcely changed. Chemicals were steady, but Kapp and Peterson fell back to 5s., and Imperial Tobaccos eased. Margarines had a well sustained further improvement. Dunlop Rubbers were on sale, and Liptons gave way.

LONDON BRIGHTER.

INTERNATIONALS IMPROVE

Business in the London Stock Markets at the reopening yesterday showed no expansion, but the brighter tendency manifest on the last day of the old year was again apparent, and a number of firm features were evident, Home Rail junior stocks attracting attention, while the International issues, Newspapers and certain of the Miscellaneous Industrials were on the up grade.

British Funds made a firm commencement on the improved monetary outlook, but the few initial improvements were not maintained. Indian issues, on the other hand, remained in a heavy condition, and further substantial depreciations were registered. Foreign Government stocks attracted scanty attention, and, apart from the dividend deductions, little material change was shown. Rather wider attention was directed to the Home Rail group, but this interest was mainly confined to the junior stocks, where some appreciable increases were shown. Rather irregular conditions ruled in Colonial and Foreign Rails. American descriptions displayed a firm front under the lead of Southern Pacifics, which advanced 5 points.

In the Industrial sections the Anglo-American issues presented a firm front, despite the fact that there had been no further session in New York, and higher values were reached. Stores provided another firm market, and Imperial Chemicals rallied afresh. Among Miscellaneous descriptions Tate and Lyle remained weak. Oils presented a firmer appearance. Mines, as a whole, attracted wider interest, and moved to higher levels in a number of directions, though Tins remained irregular.

INDUSTRIAL MARKET.

GUINNESS AGAIN ACTIVE.

"ANGLO-AMERICANS" FINISH IRREGULAR.

On the whole, a more hopeful feeling was abroad in the Industrial Market yesterday when business was resumed for the New Year Trading, however, remained on a restricted scale, there being little disposition to extend speculative commitments in view of the near approach of the carry-over, the preliminary arrangements for which take place to-day. Bargain-hunters were said to be in evidence for some of the better-class shares, a fair amount of investment business being reported. The trans-Atlantic issues continued on the up-grade in anticipation of a good opening in Wall street, which was confirmed when afternoon advices arrived from that centre. Irregularity developed in the "street," most of the earlier improvement being lost. Electricals gave a rather mixed display, with Calcutta Electric marked down further owing to the political situation in India, while the proposed scheme to prohibit foreign control of the undertaking was also a factor.

A further improvement was witnessed in all the trans-Atlantic issues until the late dealings, when irregularity developed. After being up to 40⅜, Brazil Traction Common reacted to 39½, with Nickels moving in similar fashion, finishing at 32⅜ after being a dollar higher. Hydro-Electrics made the best showing with an improvement of 1½ at 39⅜, touching 40½. International Holdings hardened to 5⅜.

Radio Corporations were lifted to 46 at one time, but fell back eventually to 44⅜. Cables and Wireless Stocks were quietly maintained, buyers being again in evidence for the Pref. at 96⅜.

The "Record" leaders did not move to any material extent, though displaying a firm front. Columbia Graphophones touched £6, closing around 5⅞. H.M.V.'s held at at 4½.

While moderate support was given in places, Electricals generally had an uncertain appearance. Calcutta Electric continued depressed in the supply group, the final quote of 47s. leaving them with a loss of 2s. 6d. on balance. Among the Equipments, Associateds improved to 25s. 9d., British Insulated to 75s. and Siemens to 24s. 6d., but Callenders ruled dull at 70s. 9d..

In the Food and Catering section, Tate and Lyles were again pressed for sale and were finally called 54s., a loss of 2s. on the day. The Margarine "twins" moved within narrow limits, the Unies leaving off unaltered at 3½, but the Unions showed a gain of ⅛ at that figure, and Liebigs put on ¼ further to 15½.

Irregular movements were witnessed among Artificial Silks and Textiles. The Celanese issues were fairly well maintained, American Celanese Common closing at 7⅛, Canadian Celanese at 2⅝, and British Celanese Ord. at 16s. 3d. Courtaulds turned dull and lost the turn at 2¼, the rest being unchanged.

Of the Textile leaders, Bleachers were inquired for at 22s 9d.; J. and P. Coats at 65s. 9d., and Fine Spinners at 25s. 6d.

In the Shipping department a few buyers came forward for Royal Mail Ord., which gained 2 points to 29½; the Pref. issues remained unaltered. Cunards had an undecided appearance, but were finally maintained at 22s. 3d., and Furness Withys ruled firm at 35s.

British Cement Products hardened to 2s. 6d., but Associated Portlands were levelled to 24s.

Bank shares gave a mixed display. Most of the home issues found favour on the satisfactory dividend announcements, but Canadian of Commerce gave way to 50, Hong Kongs to 119 and National of India to 44½.

In the Insurance department, Commercial Unions came on offer and yielded ½ to 23.

In the Miscellaneous section, Kreuger and Toll hardened fractionally to 23½, and Swedish Match also left off the turn higher at 15½. Imperial Chemicals registered a further improvement of 6d. to 26s. 6d., and the Deferred kept around 8s. 9d.; while in other directions moderate gains were registered, Crittalls at 1⅞ and Inveresks at 11s. 3d. United Molasses left off ½ to the good at 5⅞.

RECENT ISSUE DEALINGS.

County of London Electric new remained in the neighbourhood of 3s. 9d. premium, after a fairly active session. "Bats" 6 per cent. Prefs. remained at 22s.

OIL SHARES IMPROVE.

Having regard to the fact that the preliminaries in connection with the carry-over of a three weeks' account which has been broken by the extended Christmas and New Year holidays will be in progress to-day, the tendency of the Oil Share market on the first business day of 1930 left little cause of complaint. It cannot be said that business showed much improvement, but in the absence of sales such is not unusual prior to the commencement of the arrangements for the settlement. Prices generally moved to higher levels. A rather better demand existed locally for the leading counters and certain of the dividend-payers; while the Continent continued to support its favourites, such as Shells, Royal Dutch, and the Eagle issues. A fairly large turnover was reported in Canadian Eagles locally, while Mexicans were well bought on Paris account. Venezuelan, Trinidad, and miscellaneous issues shared in the better tendency.

RUBBER SHARES FIRMER.

The brighter conditions evident in the Rubber Share Market on Tuesday last were again manifest at the reopening of the market yesterday, and despite the continued slackness of interest and the irregularity apparent in the commodity market, share values reached higher values in several instances. In the raw material section, spot and January opened at 8d., but after touching 8⅛d. reacted to 7⅞d. per pound.

[FOU]R WAYS TO KEEP IN STOCK.

[Fou]rth always wise to keep some of those simple medicines which may be used with advantage at the commencement of any illness.

For internal use—Castor oil, cod liver oil, chlorodyne, Epsom salts, glauber salts, sulphate of iron, chemical food, olive oil, quinine, powdered ginger, glycerine, tincture of aconite.

For external use—Boracic acid, boracic ointment, permanganate of potash, sulphur ointment, flowers of sulphur, carbolated vaseline. Charcoal is a great help to keep fowls in health. In case of diarrhœa it may be dusted over the soft food. It should be always kept before the birds in shallow boxes in granulated form. They will pick it up, and it corrects intestinal troubles. Camphor is a splendid thing to place in the drinking water when there is an outbreak of sickness. A lump should be placed in each vessel of water, and put back when the water is changed.
